Stalin-Mao Rift Hinted Over Control In Manchuria

State Department Watching Signs for Use in American Policy in China

By John M. Hightower
Associated Press Reporter

High American officials are convinced that a split is developing between Communist China and Moscow over control of Manchuria.

They expressed belief yesterday that this is probably an issue of major importance in the current Moscow talks of Generalissimo Stalin and Chinese Red leader Mao-Tse-tung.

It is also regarded here as a point of tremendous value in the shaping of a new American policy for fighting Russian-directed communism throughout the Far East, including China.

For while American policy-makers believe Mao and Stalin will do everything possible to minimize the effects of their natural conflict of interests in Manchuria, they also believe the split will get wider.

Several Vital Problems

Mao's Moscow trip is viewed here as being well-timed to provide a close Russian-Chinese study of several vital problems with which the Russian-Communist world of the Far East is now confronted as a result of Mao's conquest of all China.

Among the most important of these problems as seen by State Department officials are these:

1. How can Russia and the new China demonstrate complete solidarity? This is expected to be accomplished by a treaty of friendship and possibly by a treaty of alliance.

2. How far and how fast Far Eastern Communists should now seek power beyond the borders of China? (Most Washington concern centers on Burma and Indochina as the next points of Communist pressure.)

3. What to do about Formosa?

What About Japan?

4. What should the Russian-Chinese Communist combine do about such Western positions in the Orient as southern Korea and Japan? The expectation here is the Communists may try to build toward power in Japan through opening the trade channels.

5. What should the Chinese Communist regime at Peiping do

Chapman Speaks at Ceremony

Work Starts on Amphitheater For Sesquicentennial Play

By Chalmers M. Roberts
Post Reporter

The first spade was turned yesterday for a 4000-seat $300,000 outdoor amphitheater for the sesquicentennial symphonic drama about George Washington, scheduled to have its premier next June 15.

Of all the sesqui and Freedom Fair structures, the amphitheater alone will outlive the 1950-51 celebration to become a permanent part of the city's cultural life.

The groundbreaking in a wooded section of Rock Creek Park off 16th st. and Colorado ave. nw. was performed by Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman. In a speech stressing the Fair Deal's civil rights aims, Chapman made it clear this is to be a gathering place for all Americans, regardless of race, creed or color.

Here are the details of the new theater:

The 4000 seats banked in 45 rows will be of the type used at Griffith Stadium—wood seats and backs on steel frames bolted to the concrete floor. They will be three feet apart, however, allowing more leg room than the usual two feet eight inches of theater seats.

The capacity was set at 4000, according to the architect, William M. Haussmann of Interior's National Capital Parks, because that

Red Sabotage Plans During War Related

Set Strategy for Possible East-West Row, Ex-FBI Agent Says

By Marshall Andrews
Post Reporter

Even while Russia was a wartime ally of the United States, the Communist "high command" was laying plans for widespread industrial sabotage in case of an East-West war, a Senate committee revealed yesterday.

Testimony, given in closed session by John J. Huber, who said he had spent nine years in the Communist Party as an FBI agent, was released by Senator McCarran (D., Nev.). McCarran is chairman of a Senate Judiciary subcommittee which has been studying legislation designed to bar subversive aliens from the U. S. and deport those already here.

Huber also testified that, despite general belief to the contrary, the Communist Party counts more than one million members and sympathizers in this country and their number is growing. The party, instead of attempting to correct the public misconception, Huber said, encourages the belief that its membership is dwindling and its power weakening.

The witness, whose home is in Mount Vernon, N. Y., gave his testimony last September 8. He described, under oath, how he had joined the party in 1937 after he had informed the FBI that some fellow-workers in the WPA were Communists. The FBI then asked him, he said, to join the party and report on its activities.

Huber said he remained a party member until mid-1947, "at which time I ceased to work with the FBI

Hungary Jails 2d American In a Month

Charges Not Revealed By Reds Against Head Of Jewish Relief Body

Budapest, Dec. 17 (AP).—Hungarian authorities have jailed Israel Jacobson, director of the Hungarian Division of the American Joint Distribution Committee, U. S. Minister Nathaniel P. Davis said tonight. It was the second arrest of an American here in a month.

American officials have been denied permission to see Jacobson and the charges have not been disclosed.

The AJDC is a Jewish relief agency. The Communist government outlawed immigration to Israel the first of the year, despite Israeli protests; and later imprisoned a group of Hungarian Zionist leaders on charges of helping Jews get out of the country illegally.

Jacobson, 37, has headed the AJDC office here since September, 1947. He was arrested Thursday on returning to Hungary from Vienna after leave in the United States.

United States legation sources said the Hungarians so far have refused to permit them to visit another American, Robert A. Vogeler, 38, of New York, who was arrested November 18 on charges of spying and sabotage.

The Government announced that Vogeler, an assistant vice president of the International Telephone & Telegraph Corp., and a

State Dept. Reported Set To Aid Spain

No Alternative Seen To Regime of Franco; Would Ask Sign of Trend to Democracy

By Homer Bigart
NYHT News Service

The State Department has concluded there is no alternative to the Franco regime in Spain, so that steps might as well be taken to bring Spain into the "Western Club" of nations, it was reported here yesterday. But before she qualifies, Spain must give evidence of evolution in the direction of democracy, these reports added.

Secretary Acheson believes outside pressure on the Franco regime has proven worse than futile. He favors quiet persuasion through diplomatic channels. In this policy he has been hamstrung by a parade of Congressmen who drop into Madrid for a few days, are charmed by the generalissimo, and announce angrily that this former ally of Hitler's is a tragically misunderstood fellow who is obviously decent because he hates the Bolsheviks.

Pfeifer Jolts Madrid

For that reason the department was grateful for the statement made in Madrid last Sunday by Representative Joseph L. Pfeifer (D., N. Y.), member of a House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee. Pfeifer shocked Madrid by remarking that the pertinent question was not what the United States intended to do about Spain but what Spain intended to do about the United States.

"I don't mean to be harsh," Pfeifer told the astounded Madrilenos, "when I say that Spain is a secondary problem to the United States. The United States, however, is a primary problem to Spain."

The Falange Party organ Arriba assailed the statement as an "impertinence."

What Pfeifer said is precisely what State Department officials are telling Spanish visitors who come to Washington in quest of loans to prop Franco's totalitarian economy.

These visitors are told that the United States wants Spain admitted into the United Nations tech-

Lindbergh Cites Threat To Survival

Noted Flier Gets Trophy at Dinner On Anniversary Of First Flight

(Pictures, Pages 10, 11)

By Melvin Altshuler
Post Reporter

Charles Augustus Lindbergh warned here last night that aviation science is creating a hypnotic "hot-house atmosphere" that endangers man's spirit and survival.

The greying aviator received the Wright Brothers Memorial Trophy "for significant public service of enduring value to aviation in the United States" at a dinner of the Aero Club of Washington in the Statler Hotel.

To scientists and fellow aviation experts at the affair, commemorating the 46th anniversary of the Kitty Hawk Flight, Lindbergh said:

"Flying has become a science in which the mind ascends, and the body becomes an increasingly unnecessary part. Hurtling through the air in a jet fighter, or vibrating through clouds on multi-engine instruments hour after hour, I realize how intellectual flying has become . . . .

"The dream of the Wright brothers was to build a power-driven airplane, and to fly it successfully. They accomplished that dream, and we, their disciples, have perfected it to a high degree. How are these perfected aircraft to be used for the benefit of man, to raise his standards in the deeper sense?"

Essential to Survival

The industrialization of aviation and its scientific advances are fine, he said—"even essential to our survival in these chaotic years.

"But in themselves, they do not contribute to the quality of human life. We must not let science hynoptize us into believing that thus we are contributing to the character of man.

"Personally, I am convinced that man cannot thrive indefinitely in the hot-house atmosphere we are creating. I believe that for permanent survival, he must balance science with other qualities of life, qualities of body and spirit as well as those of mind—qualities he cannot develop when he lets mechanics and luxury insulate

UMW Is Accused of Slowdown By National Coal Association

By Sam Stavisky
Post Reporter

The National Coal Association yesterday accused the United Mine Workers of instigating slowdown tactics in order to force operators to sign a new contract calling for $15-a-day pay and 35-cents-a-ton welfare fund royalties.

The association's Industry Bulletin declared:

"Reports from the fields are that the miners are showing utter indifference in many instances to their jobs . . . We must assume that a campaign to harass and impede production is under way by union officials, as strikes are taking place at many mines for no good reason at all."

At the same time, John D. Battle, executive vice president of the association, fired another salvo in coal management's demands for Federal action against John L. Lewis.

Battle lashed out at President Truman's refusal to apply the 80-day antistrike provision of the Taft-Hartley law against the United Mine Workers, whose 480,000 members struck four times during the past year. The miners

Jobless Aid Fund Of $300,000 Voted Despite Fears of 'Welfare State'

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 17 Gov. William Preston Lane, jr., tonight signed into law his emergency legislative program including a $300,000 State fund for relief to the unemployed and a reenacted 50-million-dollar school loan law.

The program was served up on Lane's "rush order" by a special one-day session of Maryland s General Assembly.

Governor Lane shortly before 7 p. m. signed eight of the nine bills cleared by the Assembly. The ninth, reenacting the State's search and seizure law, was amended in the closing minutes of the session; it will have to be printed and will be signed in Baltimore Monday.

The special session was one to watch like a tennis match—with heads sweeping from side to side to see the bills go by. Governor Lane said he believed it was the first time in the history of the State when such a legislative program had been made law in less than eight hours.

Most of the bills cleared without major controversy, but sharp dispute was stirred by the bill for unemployment relief. Opponents said it would open the doors wider to increased demands for State funds, and push Maryland further along the road toward a "welfare state."

Sponsors of the fund said it would hardly scratch the surface of the need and declared that even a million dollars would be inadequate.

The $300,000 State fund is to be matched dollar for dollar by local funds for assisting unemployed employable persons who are in need, previously barred from State relief. Officials said the main centers of need for the funds are in Baltimore City and in Allegany County.

In the House, the relief bill squeaked into the day's agenda by a narrow margin of three votes—82 votes were needed to suspend

Steel Union Says It Won't Ask Pay Boost

Pittsburgh, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—A spokesman for CIO President Philip Murray said today the union would "honor its contracts" and seek no further pay increases in 1950 despite the recent rise in steel prices.

The spokesman said the increased cost of steel "will not bring any demand for a fourth-round wage increase in the steel industry."

He said there was "not a chance" of reopening present contracts before next November and no possibility of a strike before December 31, 1950.

The spokesman said the United Steelworkers will stand on its contracts, which gave the union noncontributory $100-a-month pensions, despite the presidential fact-finding board statement last September that "there would appear to be justification for the union to renew its demand for larger participation in the industry's income" if prices were raised.

The spokesman said H. Charles

A. B. & W. Bus Employes Vote D. C. Stoppage

Union employes of the Alexandria, Barcroft & Washington Transit Co. early yesterday authorized a work stoppage which would be effective only in the District of Columbia.

At the same time members of Local 1131 of the Amalgamated Association of Street Electric Railway and Motor Coach Employes of America (AFL) "overwhelmingly" rejected a new company wage offer.

AB&W buses would continue under State operation in Virginia but would suspend operations at the District line. Gov. William M. Tuck seized the line July 21 under Virginia's antistrike law.

Another Virginia bus company, the Arnold line, which operates in nearby Virginia and the District, has been under State control since November 2.

The AB&W has approximately 400 drivers and mechanics and serves an estimated 75,000 daily riders.

The company operates in Alexandria and parts of Arlington. Its buses go to the Pentagon and other military establishments in Congress Unwilling

Three-Year Draft Extension Sought by Johnson, Acheson

By The Associated Press

Administration leaders definitely will ask an unwilling Congress to extend the peacetime draft for three more years.

It was learned yesterday that Secretary of Defense Johnson and Secretary of State Acheson will urge the extension at the next session as a necessary part of the defense against communist.

The present act, passed in 1948, is due to expire June 24.

One congressional source, who asked that his name not be used, said the Selective Service extension "is the No. 1 item on defense legislative musts."

Johnson already has informed Congress that continuation of the draft machinery is "essential to national security."

He has asked an annual fund of $16,700,000 to operate the Nation-wide system of registering and fense against communism.

Johnson told congressional leaders that Acheson fears the end of Selective Service might be regarded abroad as inconsistent with our policies under the Atlantic Pact and military assistance program.

Originally under the present act the Administration wanted the right to draft men for at least two years' service in the 18-through-25

Fires Rout 18 From Apartment House and Nurses' Home; British Sergeant Emerges as Hero After Police Question Him

Nurse at Garfield Suffers Severe Burns

One Garfield Hospital nurse was burned and eight others escaped injury in a two-alarm fire early yesterday that routed them from their beds and caused an estimated $10,000 damage to their dormitory.

The alarm was sounded shortly after 5 a. m. by the injured nurse, Miss Frankie Bruno, 21, who suffered first degree burns to her right wrist, thigh and ankle. The blaze started in her room, firemen said.

In below-freezing weather, nurses and passersby watched as firemen fought flames leaping through windows and skylights of the two-story brick building on the hospital grounds at Sherman ave. near Euclid st. nw. Many nurses, routed from their beds, were clad only in nightgowns and robes.

Hospital patients were not roused because the fire was confined to the nurses' home, which stands several hundred feet from the institution. About 25 student nurses, who live next door to the nurses' home, were called out, but were permitted to return when the blaze was brought under control.

The fire gutted Miss Bruno's second-floor room and caused se-

Sparks Fly at Oxon Hill as Firemen Engage in Hot Etiquette Dispute

A house at 4410 Wheeler rd., Oxon Hill, Md., wasn't the only thing burning Friday night. Tempers flared also among the firefighters—Oxon Hill volunteers and D. C. professionals—and still hadn't cooled yesterday.

Oxon Hill Chief Charles H. Arnold and his corps of 12 men and an engine were first on the scene, summoned by a telephone call from George W. Salsberry, owner of the two-story frame dwelling.

He was joined by units from seven other Prince Georges departments.

About an hour later, the District contingent headed by Third Battalion Chief C. K. Bunn arrived, responding to a box alarm turned in two blocks away on the District side of the boundary.

From here on the exact occurrences are in dispute except for agreement that a dispute took place. Chief Arnold contends the fire was under control by the time the pros arrived and was confined to the second floor area.

Chief Arnold

Chief Bunn says it was far from under control, having apparently started on the first floor, run up partitions and the flooring to the second. He ordered a group of fire-fighters to attack the ceiling with hooks and several Oxon Hill men curtly informed him he was outside his jurisdiction, Chief Bunn said.

Chief Bunn said tempers flared but he and Arnold got together on the tactics and the attack on the blaze was not delayed.

Yesterday, however, Arnold called District Chief Engineer Joseph A. Mayhew and lodged formal complaint. Mayhew

Two Women Rescued From Residence Blaze

A three-alarm fire burned through stairs and hallways of an apartment at 2040 S st. nw. yesterday, morning, routing nine women and children occupants into a 23-degree temperature outside, and did extensive damage to the building.

A British army sergeant, who saw the blaze and turned in the alarm, went through hallways of the apartment banging on doors and shouting to awaken the residents.

Afterward, on an undisclosed tip, the police picked him up and held him for three hours at the Third Precinct Station, questioning him as to whether he had set the fire. They released him with profuse apologies.

Two women were rescued by firemen. One was lowered by a rope from their second-floor apartment and the other was assisted down a ladder by firemen. The other occupants made their way out by outside iron fire escapes.

The British sergeant is John Brian Holmes, 23, who is attached to the office of Lieut. Gen. Sir William Morgan, commander of the British Army staff here. Holmes lives at Ranleigh Place, McLean, Va.

He told police he had been in a restaurant nearby and saw smoke

But Who Will Watch the Cops?

Policeman in Every Saloon Urged to Curb Yule Tippling

"A policeman in every saloon" during the Christmas season was urged by a Methodist temperance leader as a "realistic" way to reduce holiday crime and accidents.

Stationing police in every bar and night club from Christmas Eve to New Year's would save several hundreds of lives, said Dr. Caradine R. Hooton, executive secretary of the Board of Temperance of the Methodist Church.

Informed of Hooton's suggestion, Police Superintendent Maj. Robert J. Barrett commented:

"You know we have lots of crime which has no connection whatever with drinking. I wouldn't even attempt to post policemen in every bar in town.

"Why, who would watch the policemen?" he asked wryly.

The measure, said Hooton in a "special release," would greatly cut down "death and mutilation for which drunken driving is responsible."

The religious leader declared that even in ordinary times "at least half the work of the police department" is in the control of drunkenness and drink-caused crime. "During the holiday season this proportion is increased," he said.

"For some years," he added, "the holiday week from Christmas Eve to New Year has been marked by appalling violence, crime, brutality, drunkenness and disaster .

"Possibly most of this crime and disaster could be prevented by stationing policemen in beer joints, cocktail rooms, night clubs and other places of liquor sale, with instructions to stop crime at its source," he said.

Burma Recognizes Chinese Communists

Mao in Moscow

China-Soviet Friendship Pact Forecast

Moscow, Dec. 17 (AP).—A Chinese-Soviet friendship pact appeared almost a certainty here today following the arrival of China's Communist leader Mao Tze-tung in Moscow last night.

Some observers speculated that the subject of the pact alrcady may have been introduced when Mao and Prime Minister Joseph Stalin met last night at the Kremlin, soon after the Chinese leader arrived from Peiping on the Trans-Siberian railway.

The two countries also are expected to work out trade and mutual assistance agreements during Mao's first visit to the Soviet capital.

In Moscow the station and streets leading to it were bedecked with flags of the Soviet Union and the Chinese (Communist) People's Republic.

Mao obviously had timed his visit for the huge Moscow celebration of Stalin's sevenieth birthday next Wednesday.

Rangoon, Burma, Dec. 17 (U.P.)—Burma today recognized the Chinese Communist government, first country outside the Soviet bloc to do so.

Burma's recognition of the Peiping regime was conveyed by telegram to Chou En-lai, prime minister and foreign minister of the Peking regime.

"Believing that the Central Peoples' government of China has the support of the people of China and bearing in mind the traditional friendship between the peoples of China and Burma, the government of the Union of Burma hereby confirms recognition of the Peoples' Republic of China and looks forward to the establishment of diplomatic relations and to the exchange of envoys."

India May Follow Suit

In London, official British circles predicted that India would soon recognize the Chinese Communist government.

India would be the first member of the British Commonwealth to extend recognition although Britain is expected to announce her recognition by Christmas.

Burmese Foreign Minister U E Maung arrived in New Delhi today for consultations with Indian Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru. Nehru, after earlier talks with the Indian ambassador in China, expressed belief recognition of the Mao Tze-tunk government could not be much longer delayed.

Rebel Groups Active

Burma became an independent republic January 4, 1948, and in the following May Thakin Nu was reported to have pledged his intention of leading Burma into the Communist camp. U Tin Tut, then foreign minister, stated that the report was incorrect; immediately afterwards he was assassinated because of his alleged association with the West.

The cry then arose in Burma all Western influence in Burma must go. Various recalcitrant groups have since broken away from the government to voice more active support of Mao Tze-tung.

about recognition of western governments and trade with the outside world?

6. How fast should the Chinese Communists press an internal reform program in line with land redistribution and political and economic changes of the type which Russia has promoted in Eastern Europe?

It is in connection with the possibility of driving a wedge between China and Russia—or between the Chinese people and their Moscow-allied leaders — that American Government experts have been studying such questions as these for months, and have been gathering information on the Manchurian situation.

Russians May Become Foes

There is a long tradition of anti-foreign feeling in China and the Communists have been evidently trying to focus it on Americans.

There is some highly placed belief, however, that despite Communist propaganda, the Russians may end up as the targets of Chinese hatred for foreigners, largely because of Manchuria.

Even when Chiang Kai-shek was running China (supported by a Sino-Soviet friendship treaty among other things) the Russians had special rights in the major Manchurian railroad, in the control of Port Arthur as a naval base and, in the use of Dairen as a port. The United States helped them secure those postwar privileges in the course of negotiating wartime agreements.

Despite bitter Chinese Communist attacks on foreign rights in China and despite the fact that the Chinese themselves consider Manchuria as part of their own country, the Russians did not give up their special rights there when the Chinese Reds took over. Instead the evidence is that the rights were enlarged.

Last July, the Communist administration in Manchuria signed a trade treaty with Moscow for export of major foods in exchange for industrial equipment and consumer goods. The community press, in the view of State Department officials, has been hard put to explain why China should be exporting food to Russia.

Another distinction which is reportedly made between China and Manchuria under Communist rule is rigid control of trade and travel between the two areas. Officials here are convinced on the basis of facts they have that the border between Manchuria and China is like a border between two independent countries.

Resignation of Yen Reported

Taipeh, Formosa, Dec. 17 (AP).—Resignation of Yen Hsi-shan as Premier of Nationalist China was reported tonight by a reliable source.

If accepted, his retirement is expected to mark a sweeping change in government personnel with the aim of wooing new American support against the rampant Communists.

Discussed as possible successors were Gen. Pai Chung-hsi, one of the Nationalists' best military commanders, now on Hainan Island; Wang Shieh-chieh, former foreign minister and now a close adviser of Chiang Kai-shek, and former Premier Chang Chun, another strong supporter of Chiang.

(Hongkong newspaper reports said a two-man delegation already had gone to Hainan to offer Pai the job but that he was reluctant to take it.)

A new revolt today reportedly opened wide the gates for a Red Army now sweeping into the mountain lands of Western China, proposed base for Nationalist guerilla warfare.

Private reports said Szechwan Province militia went over to the Reds in the borderlands north of Chengtu, last of a series of refugee capitals abandoned by the government.

This new defection left Gen. Hu Tsung-nan and his 400,000-man army to face alone the blows of two Red armies. Revolts at his back in Sikang Province and in Yunan to the south had him in a tight corner.

30,000 Nationalists Reported Interned

Paris, Dec. 17. (NYHT)—The number of Chinese Nationalist troops who have fled across the Indo-Chinese frontier and been interned is said by official sources here today to be about 30,000.

General Pai's wife told reporters in Hongkong that he would fly to Hanoi in Indo-China to negotiate for the safe passage of "30,000 troops" across the frontier.

Ward Aide Rejects Post In So. Korea

Aboard Lakeland Victory, Dec. 17 (U.P.)—The Angus Ward rescue ship left Fusan, Korea, for Yokohama yesterday with defiant Italian-born radio technician Franco Cicogna aboard.

Cicogna refused to accept the United States State Department order assigning him to the American mission in Seoul because "it will be overrun sooner or later by North Korean Communists."

The 31-year-old Cicogna and his Moscow-born White Russian wife, who were ousted from Mukden with United States Consul General Angus Ward, apparently remained aboard the Lakeland Victory with Ward's approval.

Cicogna said Ward understood his feeling and had promised to communicate with the State Department about him.

If the State Department will not offer him another assignment, Cicogna said he will use his meager savings to pay his and his wife's passage "back to free Italy" rather than live "so near to the menacing Communist armies."

The Lakeland Victory was expected to dock Monday at Yokohama, next to last stop on the way home for Ward and his party.

Another foreign service employe, German-born Alfred Kristan, 48, former mining engineer who did maintenance work at the Mukden Consulate, also was ordered to join the Seoul mission.

Kristan told reporters he had no other choice but to accept since his wife and two children remain in Shanghai and the State Department had promised to bring them to Seoul.

"I had hoped to get farther away from the Reds," Kristan said.

Both Kristan and Cicogna were accused with Ward of beating a Chinese employe of the consulate and were imprisoned.

U. S. Warns Of Shanghai Blockade

By The Associated Press

The State Department formally warned all American ships yesterday that the blockaded Chinese Communist port of Shanghai is a danger zone which American vessels should avoid.

The action appeared to be a new Government move to discourage the Isbrandtsen Steamship Co. from sending its ships into Shanghai. They are the only United States vessels now operating in that area and in recent weeks two of them have been shelled by Chinese Nationalist gunboats.

Meanwhile, the Chinese Nationalist cabinet at Taipeh, Formosa, announced that on Wednesday, the Nationalists will begin laying mines to bar shipping from Communist-held Chinese ports. The cabinet said the step was necessary because "foreign ships still deliberately are running the blockade."

U. N. Plans New Try to Solve Riddle of Kashmir's Future

Lake Success, Dec. 17. (NYHT). A new United Nations attempt to settle the future of four million inhabitants of the princely state of Kashmir was launched by the Security Council today, when it assigned its president, General Andrew G. L. McNaughton of Canada, to confer privately with both Indian and Pakistan representatives for a solution.

In a 37-minute meeting, the Council voted 9 to 0, with the Soviet Union and Ukraine abstaining, for a proposal by Norway to entrust the task to McNaughton.

Kashmir is the largest of the old Indian princely states, being about the size of New York and New England, excluding Maine. It has been a U. N. problem since January 1, 1948, when India complained fighting there was being abetted by invaders from Pakistan. With an 80 percent Moslem population, the Hindu maharajah had proclaimed accession to India.

A five-nation U. N. commission achieved a truce last January 1, but since then there has been deadlock over conditions for a plebiscite, which both India and Pakistan agree should decide the state's future sovereignty. India controls half the state, with two thirds the population, and the rest is under an insurgent regime, whose President, Sardar Mohammad Ibrahim Khan, today made public a 23-page appeal for joining Pakistan.

This morning, Hernando Samper of Colombia, chairman of the commission, told the Council of the commission's unsuccessful efforts for mediation, a projected joint Pakistan-Indian political conference and a suggested arbitration by Fleet Admiral Chester W. Nimitz of the United States. The U. N.'s plebiscite administrator. Four members accordingly proposed the Council resort to a single individual peace-maker instead of a multi-headed negotiation, he said.

Soekarno Inaugurated

Painting Theft

Extradition Of 'Prince' Is Ruled Out

Justice Department announced last night it would not extradite Rico David Tancous, 22, charged with theft of $4500 worth of paintings from Sumner Welles, former Undersecretary of State.

A department spokesman said the decision not to extradite Tancous from Mexico was taken after evidence indicated he is not an American citizen, but emphasized the indictment will remain on the books should Tancous return here.

The youth has identified himself as "Prince Otto Wilhelm Hohenzollern, youngest son of the late Kaiser Wilhelm." Tancous is reported honeymooning in Mexico City with the former Virginia Kirk of New Orleans, heiress to an oil fortune.

The paintings have been recovered and returned to the town house of Welles.

Copenhagen, Dec. 17 (AP).—Danish Foreign Minister Gustav Rasmussen said today Denmark, as well as Norway, is opposed to a large American military mission being sent to his country under the United States arms bill, because of possible Communist criticism.

Commenting on reports Norway has complained that a large military mission to that country might cause criticism from the Soviet Union and East European countries, Rasmussen said Denmark has stressed the same point during negotiations in Washington.

Under the arms bill—providing the basis for bilateral agreements between the United States and other members of the Atlantic Union—United States military missions are to be sent to each Atlantic Pact country receiving American arms to instruct military authorities in their use.

Rasmussen did not indicate how many members there would be on the mission to Denmark. It was learned, however, it would comprise between 20 and 30 men.

nical organizations, particularly the food and agricultural organization. But that is as far as this country will go until Spain herself initiates internal reforms designed to make the regime less noisome to our Allies in western Europe.

Pressure From Pentagon

The State Department does not spell out the reforms it would like to see in Spain. To do so would be interference in the internal affairs of another country. But the Spanish emissaries are told quite plainly that they can't count on help from the United States unless they do something in return.

Despite pressure from the Pentagon, which views Spain as a strategic military potential, the State Department has not yielded from its position that Franco is not a reputable bedfellow.

About the only change in our Spanish policy is that the State Department now wants an American Ambassador in Madrid. But that cannot be until the United Nations General Assembly repeals its 1936 resolution calling on members to withdraw its chiefs of mission from Spain.

Last spring the department instructed the United States delegation at Lake Success to vote for repeal. Three members, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, John Foster Dulles and Benjamin V. Cohen, rebelled, and it was finally decided to abstain when a joint Latin American resolution, asking that freedom of action regarding diplomatic relations with Spain be left to the discretion of individual countries, came to a vote. The resolution failed of a two-thirds vote by a count of 26 to 15, with 16 abstentions.

The State Department was anxious to set aside the 1946 resolution because it placed the Government in the anomalous position of denying full diplomatic relations to Spain while according such recognition to Communist regimes in eastern Europe which have proven more repressive than Franco's.

To Mrs. Roosevelt and Cohen it seemed that a vote for the Latin American resolution might be interpreted by the free labor groups in western Europe as an ominous indication that the United States had forgotten the danger of rightist dictatorship.

It is reliably learned that Mrs. Roosevelt and Cohen have informed the State Department that they now would favor setting aside the 1946 resolution provided the new resolution makes it clear that restoration of chiefs of mission to Madrid does not signify approval of the Franco regime.

Family Worried Over Arrest of American by Reds

GRIEVED—Mrs. Israel Jacobson, pictured in Chicago yesterday with her daughters, Helen (left), 6, and Margo, 8, said "I've been terribly worried because I haven't heard from him . . . we were afraid this would happen"

Briton and a Hungarian held with him had confessed.

Informed Western sources in Vienna said they believed Jacobson might be accused before a Budapest Peoples Court of helping Hungarian Jews to get to Israel. The ADJC was mentioned in the Budapest trial of the Zionist leaders last July, but Jacobson was not involved.

Harold Trobe, Vienna director of the AJDC, said the agency's Paris headquarters had been notified of Jacobson's arrest and he assumed the case would be taken up with the United States State Department.

American legation officials in Vienna reported they had taken no action so far in the case. They were told of the arrest when they checked with the Hungarian Foreign Office to determine why Jacobson, who crossed the Austrian-Hungarian border by car at 11 a. m. Thursday, had failed to show up at his Budapest office.

Jacobson and Vogeler probably were acquainted, Trobe said, but probably were not close friends. He said he did not believe there was any connection between the two arrests.

Mrs. Jacobson, 34, wept when she learned of the arrest at her home in Chicago's South Side. With her are the couple's two daughters, Margo, 8, and Helen, 6.

She was with Jacobson in Budapest before they left three months ago on the trip to the United States.

Trobe said Jacobson has had nothing to do with the illegal flight of Jews from Hungary. He said the imprisoned man's only job was to direct relief services for Hungary's 130,000 surviving Jews.

Jacobson's assistant in Budapest is another American, Arnold Berkowitz, of New York, who notified American authorities when Jacobson failed to return. Trobe said that, so far as he knows, Hungarian police have not bothered Berkowitz.

Western informants said it appears evident both Vogeler and Jacobson will be tried on some charge in an effort to convince Hungarians all Americans in Hungary are enemies of the state and discourage any who have pro-western leanings.

It is possible, however, any sentences would be suspended and both expelled, following the pattern of Angus Ward case in Communist-held China.

State Department Told Of Jacobson's Detention

The State Department yesterday received official word that Israel Jacobson, Budapest director of the American Joint Distribution Committee, has been arrested on orders of the Hungarian government.

United States Minister Nathaniel P. Davis has reported from Budapest that he has asked the Hungarian Foreign Office why Jacobson was arrested.

British Woman Writer Also Believed Seized

London, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—The Foreign Office today announced that Edith Bone, 60-year-old Hungarian-born newspaperwoman, apparently has been arrested by Hungarian authorities in Budapest.

Mrs. Bone was last seen by her brother, who took her to Budapest airport where she planned to board a plane for London on October 1.

British Prices Continue Rise; Consumers to Feel Hike Soon

London, Dec. 17 (AP).—Price tags still are creeping higher today, three months after Britain cheapened the pound sterling. And the full effect is yet to come.

Wholesale prices generally have continued an upward trend since devaluation September 18 and housewives know it is only a question of time until the increase is passed on to them.

The Government reported that Britons went on a buying spree in October, especially for clothes and household goods. Clothing sales were up a third and household a fourth.

It said consumers apparently fear higher prices and scarcities.

In the past three months wholesale food prices have risen 6.3 percent. Causes were higher prices for wheat and flour from North America and hikes in potatoes, onions, tomatoes and other vegetables.

Nonferrous metals rose an average of 17.2 percent. Cotton is 8.9 percent higher, wool 14.3, other textiles 9.2, and chemicals and oils 4.1.

Spellman Will Lead Holy Year Pilgrims

New York, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—Francis Cardinal Spellman, Archbishop of New York, will lead the first major Holy Year pilgrimage to Rome February 18, the American Express Catholic Travel League announced today.

Other major Holy Year pilgrimages to Rome in 1950 will create the largest postwar group travel movement of Catholics, it said.

U. S. Sabotage Plans of Reds Told

of my own volition." He did not say what his present work was.

The Communist Party, Huber declared, was "the most dangerous and vicious organization" that ever existed in the United States. It takes its orders direct from Moscow, he declared, and said that the majority of party leaders in this country were foreign born and had neither comprehension of nor sympathy with American principles.

"The Communist Party," he said, "will stop at no lengths to achieve its avowed purpose of overthrowing our existing government by force or otherwise in order to establish a communistic regime in its stead."

The witness said that in late 1944 and early 1945, while the United States and Russia were allies, the party "high command" ordered "us to concentrate on foreign language groups in this country." The purpose, he said, was "to get Communist Party units and Communist Party fronts set up in industrial sections of the country."

"The purpose was, of course," he said in answer to a question, "to have a powerful party hold where they could do the most damage to the United States. In industrial areas they could organize and lead very damaging strikes, strikes that could ruin us."

Huber described the situation as "very dangerous" and said it "has to be controlled or there will be serious trouble for us." Among highlights of his testimony were that:

1. William S. Gailmor of New York, fund raiser in Henry A. Wallace's 1948 bid for the Presidency and described as a radio commentator, was a Communist. He knew this, Huber said, because he often had seen Gailmor at closed party meetings "to which only party people would be allowed to come."

2. Several hundred members of the party were teaching in New York schools and once helped an "alien element" qualify as voters even though this element could not pass required literacy tests.

3. Communist front organizations were increasing and "can boast of such well known figures as Dashiell Hammett, Lillian Hellman, Dorothy Parker, Herman Shumlin, Norman Corwin, Harlow Shapley, Ella Logan, Charlie Chaplin, Edward G. Robinson and John Garfield."

He said he understood Corwin was writing radio scripts for the United Nations which he termed "very surprising to me because Corwin was known in the party as a person who would always follow the party line."

4. He attended a secret meeting at the Albert Hotel in New York November 15, 1945, where he heard a party official impartially curse Trotzkyites, the "old leadership" of the party and FBI undercover agents.

5. Communists used "forged, false papers" to get members of the Abraham Lincoln Brigade to Spain during the civil war there. These papers, he declared, were taken up in Spain to be used later "by Soviet agents to get into the United States."

Huber, who said he came to be recognized as an excellent mix drinker, described the drinking habits of some of his ertswhile comrades. Baritone Paul Roebson, he said, like rum and coke, while Gailmor often came to him for extra drinks at the home of a hostess who was "tight" with her liquor.

In New York last night the Associated Press reported Gailmor as denying flatly Huber's story. Here an FBI spokesman declined to comment on Huber's references to that organization.

4 Thunderjets Arrive Here On Assignment

Members of the 121st Fighter Squadron of the District Air Guard were gingerly examining the throttles of four newly arrived F-84 Thunderjets yesterday.

"They'll do 600 miles an hour," said the outfit's press officer matter-of-factly.

Ferried into Andrews Field this weekend from the Republic Aircraft plant at Farmingdale, Long Island, the four jet fighters are the first of 24 such speedsters destined for delivery to the 121st Fighter Squadron.

By mid-February it is expected that the conventional propeller-type fighter planes of the 121st will be completely replaced by the speedier jets.

The District Air Guard is the first Air Guard in the entire Ninth Air Force Area to be assigned jet fighters.

First to take one of the new Thunderjets aloft was the commanding officer of the 121st, Lieut. Col. Willard W. Millikan, of 3346 Martha Custis dr., Alexandria, flying ace of World War II. He was up for 40 minutes.

Millikan took instructions in flying jet fighters at the Republic plant.

At present, three other pilots of the 121st are attending a jet training school at Shaw Air Force Base, Sumter, S. C.

Mackenzie King 75

Ottawa, Dec. 17 (U.P.)—Former Prime Minister W. L. Mackenzie King celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday today and said he is through with giving advice. He said he felt stronger now than he did when he turned over the nation's leadership to Prime Minister Louis St. Laurent last year.

age bracket. Congress cut this down to 21 months, and gave 18-year-olds the chance to volunteer for only a year.

Since then, the armed services have quit taking one-year enlistees and more recently have offered all draftees in for 21 months a chance to resign.

Senator Edwin C. Johnson (D., Colo.) and other draft critics said these moves indicated to them there was no need for the peacetime Selective Service and that it should be abandoned.

Even Chairman Tydings (D., Md.) of the Senate Armed Services Committee said it may be difficult to get Congress to approve an extension.

Gen. Leonard Gerow Urges Defense Plan for District

Lieut. Gen. Leonard T. Gerow yesterday suggested a master plan be developed to handle a major catastrophe in Washington " so we don't have to plan while the fires are burning."

"I certainly am not predicting there will be any such catastrophe," said the Second Army commander and former Army war plans chief.

"But it is not beyond the realm of possibility in this day of scientific development that means might be found to deal severe blows to Washington and other big cities."

Planning for such a contingency, he said, should be a civilian task.

"But if the military under my command was called on for assistance we'd like to know there is a reasonable sound plan so we don't have to plan while the fires are burning."

Therefore, Gen. Gerow said he had recently suggested to the 2009th Logistical Division of the Army's organized reserve—an experimental unit which combines officers from all major types of Army units—that it draw up such a master plan for Washington. He said he would suggest logistical divisions in other areas in his command do the same.

"Such experience might prove invaluable in these reserve officers, many of whom would be civilians if there is another war," he said. "These men would be of inestimable value to civilian defense."

Problems such a plan would have to anticipate, Gen Gerow said, would be how to evacuate wounded, how to feed the survivors, how to establish emergency transportation, and so on. He made his remarks by phone in amplification of a speech Thursday to the reserve group.

The Hopley Report on civilian defense for the country, prepared by the Office of Civilian Defense Planning, was submitted to the States and District government a year ago for recommendations. Since then the National Securities Resources Board has been charged with civilian defense planning but has not yet come up with a report.

Duke's Daughter, Toreador Foiled In Elopement Try

Madrid, Spain, Dec. 17—(U.P.)—Angelina, beautiful daughter of the Duke of Pino Hermoso, and Luis Miquel Dominguin, champion bullfighter, were foiled in an attempt to elope last night by the duke himself.

Angelina is 19 years old, Dominguin 24.

They met through the duke, an amateur bullfighter and Dominguin fan, two years ago, but the romance which sprang up between the young couple was most distasteful to the duke, Madrid gossips said. He did not want a commoner paying court to his daughter.

Last night the bullfighter waited beneath Angelina's balcony as she slid down a rope made of bedsheets. He bundled her into a waiting motor car and away they sped. But a watchman on the estate saw them and alerted the duke. Early this morning the couple was found.

Dominguin was released and Angelina was taken home. But Madrid gossips believed it was just a temporary setback and predicted the lovers would be reunited yet.

5 Persons Killed Going to Scene of Crashed Airliner

Vera Cruz, Mex., Dec. 17 (U.P.)—The death toll as a result of the crash of a treasure-carrying Mexican airline plane rose to 22 today.

Rescue crews, who cut their way step by step through tropical jungle, found 17 dead in the wreckage of the Compania Mexicana de Aviacion DC-3 that crashed on a mountain slope 45 miles northwest of here at dawn yesterday.

In addition, five persons were killed in two separate traffic accidents en route to the scene. One of the dead included Manuel Soberon, father of one of the plane crash victims.

Rescue crews tonight had removed 12 of the 17 killed in the plane crash. There were no survivors. The parties also recovered part of the five million pesos ($600,000 in United States dollars) carried by the plane.

Blast Toll Hits 19

Sioux City, Iowa, Dec. 17 (U.P.)—The nineteenth person died today of injuries suffered Wednesday when an explosion blamed on a gas leak shattered the Swift & Co. packing plant here. Four of the 150 persons injured still are in critical condition.

$1,480,000 Assets Reported for CIO

The Congress of Industrial Organizations has assets of $1,480,000, or about 25 cents for each member, the CIO News disclosed yesterday.

The figures were made public for the first time in 11 years and filed with the Government to comply with Taft-Hartley Act regulations. They indicate that the CIO has a little more than 5,900,000 paid-up members.

The American Federation of Labor reported a net worth of three million dollars at its 1949 convention, and claims around eight million members.

The magazine Business Week has estimated that American unions have an aggregate net worth of around one billion dollars. In a study of 50 unions, the publication lists the Brotherhod of Railroad Trainmen, a 66-year-old independent union with some 216,000 members, as having the largest assets, around 50 million dollars, most of it as reserves for its social insurance program.

In Logging Camps

Meals Food For Bargain, NLRB Rules

The price of a cup of coffee, bowl of bean soup or even a blue-plate special may very well be food for thought over the collective bargaining table.

That, at least, was the 4-1 decision yesterday of the National Labor Relations Board in the complaint of the International Woodworkers of America (CIO) against the Weyerhaeuser Timber Co.

A union local charged the company, which runs the only restaurant at the concern's sawmill and logging camps near Klamath Falls, Oreg., had hiked food prices not once but three times.

If the dining rooms are the only eating places readily accessible to some of the employes, then the employer is required, under terms of the Taft-Hartley Act, to bargain with the employes over price of the meals, the board held.

The board also held that the price of the meals in such isolated places of employment as the sawmill and logging camps was both a condition of employment and wages, both matters for bargaining.

Union Won't Ask Pay Boost

Ford, USW District 7 director, "should have been listening instead of talking" when he said the union would seek wage boosts in line with the fact-finding board's report from any company increasing prices.

Two other firms climbed aboard the price-increase bandwagon despite the hope of Senator Joseph C. O'Mahoney (D., Wyo.), chairman of the Joint Economic Committee, that other firms would not follow Big Steel's lead.

They were Youngstown Sheet & Tube Co., whose president Frank Purnell said price increases "were inevitable" and the National Supply Co.

O'Mahoney ordered an investigation into the price action by his group and Representative Emanuel Celler (D., N. Y.), chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, ordered another.

New CIO Unit Signs 1st Major Contract

The CIO's new International Union of Electrical, Machine and Radio Workers announced yesterday the signing of its first major contract—with Philco Corp., covering 7000 workers at the Philadelphia plant.

The contract establishes a pension plan to which the company agreed to contribute at the rate of 8½ cents an hour for each employe.

Benefits will be $100 monthly, including Social Security payments, for workers retiring voluntarily at age 65 after 25 years' service.

The union said the contract also includes provisions for payment of job severance benefits.

UMW Accused Of Slowdown

are now working only three days a week on Lewis' order. A comparative handful of miners are working the full week in those few mines which have signed new contracts with the UMW.

The "national emergency," which the President must proclaim before invoking the Taft-Hartley Act, already exists, Battle insisted yesterday.

"Do people have to freeze and factories close down before the Government recognizes that there is an emergency?" he asked.

The coal association leader said reports had reached his organization that some "high Government officials" disclaim any emergency in coal, but instead offer the suggestion that "people should move into one room and close the rest of their homes in order to save fuel."

Such a suggestion is worse than wartime regulations, Battle asserted. He added:

"John L. Lewis will, no doubt, continue to force a coal shortage on the American public so long as the Government stands by inactive."

During the past week, coal operators have been insisting on Government intervention to settle their strike-marred dispute with the mine workers over a new contract. The Southern Coal Producers Association urged President Truman to apply the Taft-Hartley Act, as did the American Retail Coal Merchants Association.

The Southern producers also asked for antitrust action against Lewis, through either the courts or Congress, because Lewis limited the work week to three days in nonsignatory mines. A spokesman for the Northern and Western producers joined in the demand for action by asking Congress to outlaw industry-wide bargaining.

Thus far Mr. Truman has shrugged off all requests that he use the Taft-Hartley Act against the United Mine Workers. The President dislikes the legislation, campaigned on a platform calling for its repeal. He has stated he would invoke the law against the miners when, and if, there was a national emergency created by a coal shortage.

Meanwhile, from Middlesboro, Ky., a local UMW official announced that "several railroad mines" in Bell and Harlan Counties had signed the new contracts. Hitherto UMW announcements of contract agreements have related to truck mines. Mines producing less than 3 percent of the Nation's annual tonnage have signed up with the union.

TOY MATINEE ATTENDANTS—Santa Claus accepted canned goods offerings from Richard Shields, 3, of 405 West Thornapple st., Bethesda, and Rose Marie Smith, 5, of 534 N. Monroe st., Arlington, who attended the toy and canned food matinee at Sidney Lust's Bethesda Theater yesterday. More than 800 children brought offerings to the theater, and stayed to enjoy a stage and screen show, meet Redskin football stars, and listen to a concert by the Metropolitan Police Boys Club Band

Vote A. B. & W. Part Stoppage

Arlington as well as National Airport.

Fred Dominy, union president, said the AFL union's membership voted 2 to 1 yesterday to cease operations outside Virginia and authorized a committee headed by Dominy to set the date for the suspension.

This would mean that AB&W buses would stop at the Virginia approaches to bridges leading into Washington instead of continuing to the company terminal at the Old Postoffice Building on Pennsylvania ave. nw., between 11th and 12th sts.

Last September the union filed a complaint with the Interstate Commerce Commission challenging the right of the Commonwealth of Virginia to operate buses into the District.

Dominy indicated that the union is impatient with the long delay in having the complaint heard by the ICC and may proceed on its own.

Originally a hearing had been scheduled on the complaint for December 27. Now the hearing has been delayed until January 6.

The offer rejected at yesterday's membership meeting would have given drivers and mechanics with a year or more of experience a 5-cent hourly increase plus an additional 3 cents an hour next July 21. Workers with less than a year's experience would have gotten an 8-cent hourly increase immediately.

The scale in the old contract for drivers was $1.12 an hour for new men, $1.22 after six months, and $1.35 after one year. Top scale for mechanics was $1.45.

The union originally demanded an increase of 30 cents an hour but has since scaled down its request to 15 cents.

Dominy said the latest company offer also provided for a reduction in the regular work week from 42½ hours to 40 hours.

He said failure on the part of the company to allow for retroactive payment of the proposed increase was a principal factor in the rejection of the offer by the union.

If the increase had been made retroactive to last July 21, the date on which the union's contract with the company expired, it would have cost the company about $18,000, Dominy estimated.

Both James H. Flanagan, chairman of the District Public Utilities Commission, and Corporation Counsel Vernon E. West said there was nothing they could do to force the union drivers to bring the buses into the District.

'New' Capitol Hill Chambers Will Retain Old Federal Dignity—With Modern Touch

The Senate and House chambers have become striking—"yet restrained"—studies in gold and blue, respectively.

But the Capitol Architect's office feels confident the job of restoring the halls to their old Federal era dignity, with a few modern-age touches, will not choke up even the most fastidious congressional art conformists.

This year's work on top-to-bottom renovation of the two chambers is expected to be finished Wednesday—13 days ahead of the convening date deadline.

In place of the tired, off-white plastered walls, a soft golden fabric covers the Senate walls from the ceiling to the gallery level.

Soft Blue Wall

House members have been graced with a similar soft blue wall covering with an indistinct white design.

But below the gallery level, nothing has been touched. That comes next summer when the second half of the four-million-dollar refurbishing will be completed.

The contrast prompted one old-time Hill observer to quip yesterday: "The chambers remind me of a man with a new coat and an old pair of pants."

Gone, too, are the hideous steel beams which had kept both roofs from collapsing, archaic lighting, poor accoustics and stal eair.

Central Fluorescent Lights

The new ornamented plaster and stainless steel ceiling with central fluorescent lights will be eye-openers to the legislators.

The ceilings have millions of tiny holes which will not only take out old air but will absorb sound. The upper walls and the press galleries have been lined with the latest in acoustic installation.

Charles Henlock, administrative officer of the Capitol Architect's office, explained that engineers went to great pains to strike the "proper balance between soundproofing and better acoustics."

How they did remains the $64 question. Only the first few speeches will give the answer.

Freedmen's Raises Rates, Effective On December 29

New and substantially higher rates for care at Freedmen's Hospital will become effective at midnight, December 29, it was announced yesterday.

It calls for $6.50 a day charges for ward accommodations, in contrast to the present $5 a day charge; $9 instead of the present $7 for private room care, and $3.25 instead of the present $2.50 a day for hospitalization of children under 7 years of age.

Other increases for extra services are also provided in the new schedules announced by Herman A. Johnson, acting superintendent at the hospital.

Vincent Sheean Reweds Former British Wife

London, Dec. 17 (AP).—Vincent Sheehan, the American author, and his former British wife were remarried today at the Marylebone register office.

Mrs. Sheehan is the former Diana Forbes-Robertson, youngest daughter of the late actor, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson.

She and Sheehan were married in Vienna in 1935 after a courtship lasting only a few months. They were divorced four years ago.

Lane Makes Law of Relief, School Loan Bills Passed at Whirlwind Session of Assembly

the rules and take up the measure, and 85 members voted to do it. The House then approved the bill, 84 to 37. Prince Georges County members supported the bill generally, while Montgomery County members opposed it.

In the Senate, Senator Daniel Ellison, Republican of Baltimore, proposed boosting the relief fund to $500,000 but his move was beaten 13 to 2 in the Finance Committee. The bill was then approved by the Senate, 26 to 3, after a final flurry of dispute.

Senator P. G. Stromberg, Democrat of Howard County, said the State had been generous to its needy and unemployed, "but when we give relief to those capable of working, there's no telling where the policy will lead us." He was joined in voting against the bill by Senators Stanford Hoff, Republican, of Carroll County, and Henry H. Balch, Democrat, of Talbot County.

Steered by Sothron

Senators Ellison and Robert B. Kimble, Republicans, of Allegany, teamed in a final appeal for the relief plan. The measure was steered to Senate adoption by Senator L. Harold Sothron, Democrat, of Prince Georges, majority floor leader.

Fears that the bill would be an opening wedge for increasing relief demands were voiced by Delegate LeRoy Pumphrey, Democrat of Prince Georges, House majority floor leader, and chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, during his group's hearing on the measure. He voted to bring the bill up in the House but did not vote in the roll call on final passage.

Delegate Anders R. Lofstrand, chairman of the all-Republican delegation from Montgomery County, said the group opposed the relief bill for two reasons:

1. That it doesn't meet the emergency, and
2. That the basic problem is one of high State taxes driving industry out of Maryland.

Passed to Correct Error

The $50,000,000 school bond bill, like several others, was passed to correct a leislative error, an incorrect Senate journal entry that led the State Court of Appeals to overturn the statute written by the last reular session.

Major school construction projects in the greater Washington area are keyed to the State loan plan. Montgomery County has asked $1,330,000 toward its $5,040,000 building program for 1949-50. Prince Georges County expects to ask about $6,200,000 to finance the major part of an $8,000,000 building program.

The plan calls for the State to sell its bonds and advance the building money to the counties which will repay it. A change was written in to the reenacted law to comply with Maryland's constitutional 15-year limit on bond issues—the main effect would be to require the counties to repay the advances in 14 years.

Provisions of Seven Laws

The seven other new laws will:

1. Exempt school bonds from State, local, and municipal taxes.
2. Authorize a $300,000 Calvert County bond issue for school construction, including a new consolidated elementary school for the North Beach-Chesapeake Beach-Randall Cliff area, alterations for the Fairview consolidated elementary school, and additions to the Brooks High School in Prince Frederick.
3. Provide a $350,000 State loan for construction at the Maryland School for the Blind. This bill corrects a technical error in a similar earlier law.
4. Gives bailiffs in Baltimore Orphans Court salaries of $3300 to $3800 in stead of $3080. This, too, corrects a legislative mistake.
5. Fix a 10½-ton limit on oyster boats operating in waters of Somerset County.
6. Appropriate $25,000 for expenses of the special session.

On Request of Hammond

The search and seizure law was reenacted identically with the measure now on Maryland statute books on request of Attorney General Hall Hammond. Defense attorneys in a gambling case in Baltimore made a legal point that the 1939 act is invalid because it appeared on the books without an amendment that was added before final passae. Attorneys said the new action will not affect the pending case.

A number of attempts were made in committees to add amendments to the new bill, and these met defeat in at least two cases by only one vote. One would have required service of a search warrant within 15 days of issuance, and another would have affected presumption-of-law-violation basis on which search warrants may be issued.

The Montgomery County delegation decided against asking the special session to take up a bill the group had drafted to clarify legal requirements for county referendums on bond issues.

Delegate R. Duncan Clark, Republican, of Montgomery, said that under present law, bond attorneys had ruled a referendum must be held on any bond issues exceeding ¼ of 1 percent of the county's tax base. Clark said that "we felt that the intent of the law was to comply with the county charter under which bond issues are subject to referendum on petition."

He said the bill would eliminate the mandatory submission of all bond issues to a referendum, while still keeping the assurance of referendum upon petition.

He said the delegation discussed the question with the County Council and decided the measure should have more public discussion. If reaction is favorable, it will be brought up at the regular legislative session in February, he added.

Women Warned Of Fake Kinsey Research Calls

New York, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—The National Better Business Bureau warned women tonight not to spill out the secrets of their sex life to phony "Kinsey researchers."

General Manager Edward L. Greene of the National BBB said there was a wave of fake telephone calls in the Nation. The chief hoaxes, he said, are telephone interviews with housewives by "Kinsey researchers" seeking sex secrets, and spurious announcements by telephone that the housewife has just won a big contest.

Greene warned that the outbreak of sex interviews by men claiming to be researchers for Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey's new book on sexual behavior in the human female may be engineered by dangerous sex degenerates.

None of Kinsey's associates conduct telephone interviews, Greene said. He urged housewives to check all calls.

Low Income Called Promiscuity Factor

By The Associated Press

A University of Chicago sociologist said yesterday a low family income is a big factor in sexual promiscuity among young girls.

Dr. Ernest W. Burgess told a Senate-House economic subcommittee that, in addition to low income, delinquency in both sexes is caused by "bad housing, slum neighborhoods, prevalence of gangs and lack of community organization."

The subcommittee is studying low incomes and what can be done about them.

Most girl delinquents are from low-income families, and the "great majority of girl delinquency is that of sexual promiscuity."

Burgess said these girls meet "other girls already engaged in illicit sexual behavior with a number of youths from a group unsupervised by parents or character-building institutions."

At first the girls "decline to engage in drinking and sex relations," he said.

"The group soon gives her to understand that she must conform and join in the activities or leave the group. Many decide to join in for the sake of fun and a good time.

"Sex relations are not begun because of sexual desire in the majority of cases but due to group pressure and because of the insistence and pleading of one of the young men.

"The next step is for the girl to become promiscuous.

"Finally, she may learn that she can receive presents and obtain money for sexual relations. Sooner or later she is apprehended, brought into court and committed to the State training school for girls."

Dr. Burgess said his testimony was based upon a study of 100 girls in a State training school.

As remedies for low incomes and resulting juvenile delinquency, he proposed steady family income for a minimum standard of living, abolition of slums and model neighborhood housing projects to replace the slums.

Truman Due Back This Week

Key West, Fla., Dec. 17.—President Truman, speaking at graduation exercises of the United States Fleet Sonar School here today, said antisubmarine warfare training is "one of the great necessities of our national defense program."

Mr. Truman presented certificates to 36 graduates. Sonar is used for detecting submarines by echoes from sound waves sent through the water by electricity.

The President is near the end of his three-week vacation at Key West Naval Station. He is scheduled to leave for Washington aboard his special plane at 8:45 a. m., Tuesday, arriving in the Capital about 1 p. m.

Thursday morning he will meet with the Cabinet to go over the draft of his State of the Union message and other matters. Friday he will fly to his home at Independence, Mo., for the Christmas holidays. He will return to Washington, Dec. 28.

It was learned today that Mr. Truman intends to name a new chairman of the National Security Resources Board around January 1. Last spring he nominated former Washington State Governor Mon C. Wallgren for the job, but the nomination was tabled in the Senate and subsequently withdrawn. John R. Steelman, assistant to the President, has been acting chairman of the board for months.

Geologists Award Penrose Medal To Dr. Woodring

Dr. Wendell P. Woodring, geologist, of 202 Raymond st., Chevy Chase, Md., has been awarded the Penrose Medal of the Geological Society of America.

A coveted honor in scientific research, the medal, "for distinguished achievement in the geologic sciences," is awarded only in those years when an outstanding candidate is presented.

Dr. Woodring was singled out for the honor for his researches in geology and paleontology in the West Indies, Central and South America. He serves with the U. S. Geological Survey, which he first entered in 1919.

Flood Survey Bill For Potomac Backed

Representative J. Glenn Beall (R., Md.) last night disclosed details of a proposed flood control survey of the Potomac River Basin from Cumberland, Md., to Washington.

He said he will introduce legislation at the next session of Congress to get a comprehensive Federal survey under way.

Beall said the survey probably would be made by the Corps of Engineers.

Maryland is interested in the flood control project because of its soil erosion problem in the western part of the State, Beall said.

"The whole problem was created because our timber was stripped," he declared. "Now when the heavy rains come there is nothing to hold back the top soil and it is drained off into the river and washed down to Washington."

Beall said he hopes the survey will make it possible to erect defenses against soil erosion and the flash floods which have scourged the region in the past.

The Congressman said one suggestion has been that pine trees be planted along the river banks. In time the trees would become a natural barrier against heavy waters rushing from the land down to the river.

"This might restore the natural balance," he said.

Beall said he does not yet have available an estimate of what the survey would cost but expressed belief it would not be much.

He said the river already has been surveyed by the Corps of Engineers from Cumberland to a point near Harpers Ferry, W. Va. This was about 10 years ago.

This survey would have to be revised and the remaining portion of the river between Harpers Ferry and Washington surveyed completely, Beall said.

The Upper Potomac River Flood Control Commission met Friday night at Frederick, Md., and adopted a resolution calling for such a survey as will be proposed in Congress by Beall.

Agriculture Chorus Gives Fine Concert

By Paul Hume

The Agriculture Choristers, directed by Richard Dirkser, gave their first public concert last night.

Drawn from personnel of the Agriculture Department the singers appeared in Jefferson Auditorium of that agency. Their program included some of the best choral music of the Christmas season and examples of nonseasonal music for mixed voices.

The new chorus may pride itself on its well balanced tone and the ease with which they sang their taxing list. It was unusual and more than ordinarily pleasant to hear unfamiliar music for chorus by D'Indy, Benjamin Britten and Vaughan Williams.

Early madrigals and current folk songs came off equally well with Bach chorales. The chorus can master real volume and vigor when it wants to. They are at times lacking in incisiveness and precision. That will wear off as they sing together more. They and their director are off to a fine start.

180 MPH Winds Help 2 Airliners Set Speed Marks

London, Dec. 17 (AP)—A 180-mile-an-hour tail wind shoved two airliners to new speed records for transatlantic flights today.

The Pan American stratocruiser Yankee flew from New York to Shannon, Ireland, in 7 hours, 49 minutes, covering the 2670 miles at an average speed of 395 miles an hour. The old record of 8 hours, 25 minutes was set by a British Overseas Airways Constellation in December, 1946.

A Dutch KLM Constellation winged from Gander, Newfoundland, to Prestwick, Scotland, 2090 miles, in 5 hours, 28 minutes, 21 minutes faster than the previous record KLM said.

Emaciated Girl Pulled From Attic After 2 Years

Greeneville, Tenn., Dec. 17—(U.P.) Police tonight dragged a "horrible emaciated" 18-year-old girl from a dark and musty attic where she had been "living" for two years because she disliked her stepmother.

Greene County Sheriff Dahl Pruitt said the girl, Joyce Conduff, had to be taken forcibly from the unfloored and filthy attic of a home in the downtown section.

"She was terribly dirty, and in an awful physical condition," Pruitt said. The girl was released after an almost fruitless questioning because authorities said they had no reason to hold her.

Pruitt said the girl was wearing only a soiled pair of dungarees and a ragged, worn shirt when police pushed through the only entrance to the attic—an 18-inch hole in the ceiling of a closet on a lower floor.

Sheriff Pruitt said the girl indicated she had stayed in the attic simply because she did not want to be around her stepmother. She said she ran away to Florida two years ago and had been in the attic, coming out to eat leftovers only when the stepmother and an older sister were not about the house.

Glee Club Concert

Dunbarton College Glee Club will give its annual Christmas concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the college auditorium, 2935 Upton st., nw.

Graying 'Lone Eagle . . .'

By Jack Lartz—The Washington Post

'Lindy' Cites Peril to Survival

him too greatly from the earth to which he was born."

The Wright brothers—Orville and Wilbur—maintained such balance, said Lindbergh, but since then it's been lost in aviation science through specialization.

Cites Speed of Today

"We plan huge rockets that will travel faster than a rifle's bullet, for thousands of miles, and we talk about flying to the moon as freely as people talked about flying from one city to another before that December day at Kitty Hawk," he said.

The only way to insure that future developments contain the "qualities of life we have left behind," is "through a re-orientation of our standards, only by placing the character of a man above the value of his products," he asserted.

Lindbergh made one of his rare public appearances to accept the award. But the occasion was heightened by the presence of his wife, Anne Spencer Morrow Lindbergh. Dressed in a purple velvet gown, she sat in the audience and wasn't recognized until introduced.

Lindbergh, now 48, spoke in a clear, unhurried style. As the citation for the award was read, he nodded—very slightly—at each point. He faced the battery of photographers after the speech almost phlegmatically, following their orders without a smile.

Kitty Hawk anniversaries in Washington heard other warnings along the same line. One was sounded by Senator Ralph E. Flanders, Vermont Republican, at the Aero dinner.

Two other evaluations of aviation's social and spiritual impacts came at the closing sessions yesterday of the National Aviation Forum at the Statler Hotel.

To the Rt. Rev. Msgr. Maurice Sheehy of Catholic University, the "first and immediate spiritual function of air power is to preserve the peace. That can be attained only if we, who want peace, retain superiority in the air.

"The airplane," he said, "is God's footprints upon the mind of man, directing him to new and larger horizons of life."

Cites Social Implications

Dr. George D. Stoddard, president of the University of Illinois, said only political and social implications can halt aviation's advances.

"The truth is we are afraid to let planes in from all parts of the globe. Americans are certainly not welcome everywhere," he declared.

A Denver, Colo., school teacher, Miss Elsie Whitlock Adams, received the National Aviation Forum's Brewer Trophy for outstanding contributions to aviation education.

The award is a statue of a youth atop the world.

Lindbergh's award is a model of the Wright Airplane mounted on a block of granite from the same quarry as the monument marking the site of the Kitty Hawk experiments.

The Aero Club citation to Lindbergh hailed him not only for his "Spirit of St. Louis" flight across the Atlantic in 1927, but for his 1936 studies of European military aviation, his wartime service as a consultant, and his activities since 1947 as a special consultant "to the Chief of Staff, operating with fighter and bomber groups in the United States, Alaska, Pacific and European areas."

Among the guests at the dinner for Lindbergh were Hoyt Vandenberg, commanding general of the Air Force; Gen. Carl (Tooey) Spaatz; J. H. Carmichael, president of Capital Airlines; Maj. Gen. L. S. Kuter, commanding general of Military Air Transport Service; Sumner Pike, member of the Atomic Energy Commission; Representative Carl Hinshaw (R., Calif.); Louis E. Leverone, president of the National Aeronautic Association, who presented the Aero award; J. J. O'Connell, jr., president of the Civil Aeronautics Board; Miss Adams; Thomas T. Carter, chief of the State Department's Aviation Policy staff, and Assistant Commerce Secretary Thomas W. S. Davis.

Republican Gets Furnace Meant For White House

Brawley, Calif., Dec. 17 (U.P.)—A Republican cattle rancher announced today that he and President Truman had their furnaces mixed up.

A furnace company delivered a furnace intended for the White House to Stafford Hannon here and Hannon's furnace went to Washington.

Hannon said he is returning President Truman's furnace to the factory in Monrovia, Calif.

"It's entirely too expensive for a Republican to run," he said.

Ford Offers Hoffman Post In Foundation

Detroit, Dec. 17 (AP).—Henry Ford 2nd, president of the Ford Motor Co., said today he has asked ECA Administrator Paul Hoffman to become president and managing director of the Ford Foundation.

Ford said he had 'just barely talked to Mr. Hoffman about it and no agreement was reached."

Hoffman was reported en route from Washington to his home in Pasadena, Calif. Friends in Washington said he never would resign as administrator of the Marshall Plan until it has succeeded. He is on leave from a $95,000-a-year job as president of Studebaker Corp.

The Ford Foundation was established in January, 1936, by the late Edsel Ford, son of Henry Ford. It is an educational, scientific and charitable organization and will hold 89.4 per cent of the Ford Motor Co. stock when the Henry Ford estate is settled. Its assets were listed last year as 204 million dollars.

The foundation now has no such post as managing director, the position reported offered to Hoffman.

Its affairs are managed by Ford, as president, and a board of directors. Most of its activities in the last year have been directed to the completion of a study of how the fund may be used.

Death Ruled Accident

The death of Joseph C. White, 31, former photographer and assistant picture editor of the Washington Times-Herald, who perished Friday in a fire at his home, 3335 Dix st. ne., was termed "accidental" in a certificate issued last night by Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald.

Arnold Lines Called Unsafe, Inadequate

A complaint that the Washington, Virginia & Maryland Coach Co. (Arnold Lines), is rendering inadequate and unsafe service will be presented again by Arlington authorities before the Interstate Commerce Commission and the Virginia Corporation Commission.

This action was voted yesterday by the Arlington County Board after a motion by Commissioner Daniel Dugan to ask revocation of the company's franchise failed for want of a second.

The line carries thousands of commuters into and out of Washington daily. It is now being operated by the State of Virginia under an order of Gov. William Tuck's emergency jurisdiction because it faced a shutdown by strike as result of a wage dispute.

Two years ago, the Arlington County Public Utilities Commission filed a similar complaint about service and safety on the line. Three months after it was filed, the complaining body decided to suspend action because the line had undergone a revision of its management and financing.

The motion yesterday was to file a petition with both the Interstate Commerce Commission and the State Corporation Commission, asking them to order the company to show cause why it should not render "adequate and safe" service, in contrast with its present operations.

Hearings on a fare increase proposal by the company, which was suspended recently by the ICC, shortly before it was to have been effective, are now scheduled for January 3. Solution of the wage dispute depends on the outcome of that hearing, company officials have said, contending they cannot pay increased wages without a fare increase.

Talk on South Africa

Rufus Green, a British social service worker recently returned from South Africa, will talk on the country's problems and needs at a lecture, "One Man's Vision," to be given Monday at 8:30 p. m. in St. John's Church Library, 821 16th st. nw.

Most of Editorial Staffers Walk Out on Arkansas Daily

Little Rock, Dec. 17 (AP).—Most of the editorial workers on the 131-year-old Arkansas Gazette went on strike today.

The 21 or 23 strikers—the total wasn't quite clear—are members of the CIO American Newspaper Guild. They walked out after negotiations over a contract broke down. They couldn't agree on the dismissal clause.

While pickets marched in the rain, a skeleton staff of supervisory employes, editorial writers, the newspaper's cartoonist and three reporters were getting out the paper.

J. N. Heiskell, president and editor of the morning newspaper, oldest west of the Missippi, issued a statement saying:

"There has been no final disagreement on major issues pertinent to a union contract—wages, working conditions, hours and conditions of employment. However, at the beginning of the negotiations, the guild has demanded a voice in the hiring of editorial employes, and in determining their competence, with a flat veto right in all cases of dismissal."

An ANG spokesman said management had refused to agree on a clause covering dismissal of employes and "further refused to agree to carry such disputes to an impartial, outside arbitrator to be agreed upon by both parties."

Twenty-Two Years Ago—'Lindy' Got the Flying Cross

By Hugh Miller—The Washington Post

CHARLES A. LINDBERGH AS HE RECEIVED THE DISTINGUISHED FLYING CROSS FROM PRESIDENT COOLIDGE JUNE 11, 1927

Nation Honors Wright Brothers In Ceremonies at Kitty Hawk

Kitty Hawk, N. C., Dec. 17 (AP).—A grateful Nation today remembered the Wright brothers on the forty-sixth anniversary of the flight that gave man dominion over the air.

National Government and aviation officials joined residents of this community in ceremonies commemorating the flight. They paid tribute to Wilbur and Orville Wright around the monument that marks their flight atop lonely, windswept Kill Devil Hill on North Carolina's outer banks.

The Air Force and the Postoffice Department stepped in to make airmail history for the occasion. They shot a letter to Dayton, Ohio, the home of the Wrights, and back. The letter, carried by an Air Force jet fighter, made the 1000 miles in 2½ hours of actual flying time.

The letter bore the first canceled stamp of the new 6-cent airmail issue honoring the Wrights. Kitty Hawk's tiny fourth-class postoffice soon had more than 400,000 covers, all bearing the new stamp, on their way to stamp collectors throughout the world.

Another letter, sent round the world in a record time of less than five days, was from President Truman to the Kill Devil Hill Memorial Association. Robert S. Johnson of Washington, president of the Air Force Association, presented the letter to Representative Herbert C. Bonner (D., N. C.), who read the President's message.

The letter was carried around the world by Tom Lamphier, Jr., of Falls Church, Va., a wartime fighter ace in the South Pacific, who acted as courier for the Air Force Association.

Dozens of Air Force and civilian planes zoomed overhead during the ceremonies. A B-25 bomber bringing Maj. Gen. Orvil A. Anderson, formerly of Alexandria, Va., from Maxwell Field, Ala., crashed in landing at Manteo Airport, but no one was injured. The plane's landing gear collapsed.

How Historic Photo Was Made

Miller, who made pictures before the advent of modern news camera film, "shot" the picture at a fiftieth of a second with a 17-inch-lens Graflex camera on orthonon plate (glass). He developed it in A, B, C. Pyro for 10 minutes, as he recalls.

The scene of the presentation was the foot of the Washington Monument. The crowd was one of the largest—if not the largest—ever assembled on The Mall, according to Miller.

Lane Asks Drivers To Keep Maryland Yule Season Safe

Governor W. Preston Lane, Jr. of Maryland yesterday issued his annual Christmas safety message, urging everyone to keep "Maryland's holiday season free from the shadow of tragedy on our highways and streets."

"The season will crowd our highways," he said. "Weather conditions are treacherous—our children will be on vacation — and traffic deaths and accidents are on the increase."

The Governor added, "If we all make a resolution to drive and walk safely, to watch out for children, to resist the impulse to take a chance, we can make liars out of the statisticians . . ."

Reconciliation Hope Fades for Shirley Temple

Hollywood, Dec. 17 (AP).—The possibility of a Chrystmas idyll of kiss-and-make-up between Shirley Temple and her divorced husband John Agar faded today after their first meeting since their divorce.

Shirley disclosed that Agar had visited their baby, 22-month-old Linda Susan, late yesterday, but she put a brisk chill on reconciliation talk.

"All I had to say was said in divorce court," said the actress. She obtained an interlocutory decree December 5 while Agar was on an eastern personal appearance tour.

"I can absolutely see no possibility of a reconciliation," Agar said.

Flogging Case Ends In Jury Deadlock

Rome, Ga., Dec. 17 (AP).—The mass civil rights trial of 10 men with its tales of seven flogged Negroes and night-riding Ku Klux Klansmen ended in a mistrial today.

The decision was made by United States District Judge Frank A. Hooper after jury foreman Herman D. Casey, jr., Rome auto salesman, announced a hopeless deadlock. Casey said that since the first ballot the jury had been divided seven for conviction, five for acquittal.

The jury returned to the courtroom precisely 48 hours after the case was received at 2:45 p. m. Thursday.

On trial were Dade County Sheriff John W. Lynch, three of his deputies and six private citizens.

Defense Attorney Frank M. Gleason of Rossville, Ga., said, "I think it is a signal victory for the defense." The defendants received the decision with little expression, aware they still are subject to further prosecution.

Each of the 10 defendants was accused in a two-count indictment of plotting to deprive seven Negroes of their constitutional rights by arresting them "without cause" April 2 and then surrendering them to a Ku Klux Klan mob for whipping.

Since November 21, the jurors have been bombarded with nearly 900,000 words of testimony from 113 witnesses, 67 of them for the Government.

Throughout 18 days of testimony and legal wrangles the Government tried to show that there had been a conspiracy by the defendants and the Ku Klux Klan to seize and beat the Negroes.

The case had its beginning the night of April 2 in Hooker, Ga., 12 miles southeast of Chattanooga, Tenn.

There, the Government charged, the hooded and robed members of the "Invisible Empire," after a cross-burning and prayer meeting atop Hooker Hill, drove the seven Negroes to a hollow and then marched them one by one, a Klansman on each side, up a hill.

At the top the Negroes were made to remove their trousers, and then were beaten with sticks, ropes, and leather straps.

Handlebar Accident Kills Boy, 12

A 12-year-old Alexandria boy died of a fractured skull suffered when he fell over the handlebars of his bicycle, police of that city reported yesterday.

He was Robert Willett, of 316 Slaters la., son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard E. Willett. Police said the accident occurred at about 3:25 p. m., Friday, in the 1000 block of N. Pitt st., Alexandria. The boy was conscious and sitting on the curb when they arrived, police said, but became unconscious before they reached Alexandria Hospital with him. He died several hours later.

Police said the only external injury was a small bruise on the neck, but hospital authorities later reported the skull fracture and a cerebral hemorrhage.

Le Beau Bursts Through for Baby's Sake

To begin with, Edward Le Beau is going to take his wife's word over the doctor's on such matters as having a baby. Secondly, the next time he tries to get into Sibley Hospital in the early morning, Le Beau will remember the back door is locked.

Le Beau, 28, of 3322 Ninth st., ne., was awakened by his wife, Alice, 26, about 1:30 a.m. yesterday with the warning that the time had arrived for all good husbands to become flurried.

Le Beau called the doctor. The doctor said nonsense—not for 10 days at least.

But at 2 a. m. there was no doubt the newest member of the Le Beau family—a daughter, as it turned out—had decided to overrule medical opinion.

Not much later, Mrs. Le Beau, wrapped in an overcoat in the back seat of the family car, was on the way to the hospital.

Now, Le Beau said that about a year ago he took a friend's wife to Sibley early in the morning and the back door—the ambulance entrance—was open.

As he left the car, Mrs. Le Beau said she thought the child was born.

"I opened the door," he said, "and she was right."

Frantic, Le Beau hurried to the hospital door. It was locked.

"My wife was calling to me; I thought I heard a baby cry. It was awful!"

Despite a shoulder injury suffered in the Marines, Le Beau crashed through the door and rounded up a platoon of nurses.

A Different Policy

"Everything was all right then. I found out later the hospital has changed their policy about the back door. They keep it locked now to keep intruders out. But it was an awful situation."

Mrs. Le Beau and 7-pound daughter are doing well. Le Beau is getting over his door-crashing experience, and said he's going to take a two-week vacation from his job as a machinist for the Navy to care for David, 4, and Samuel, 3. The third child, Esther, one-year and one-day old, will be sent to friends.

The hospital said damage to the door was "negligible."

DOG AND BOY WILL BE PALS—Six-year-old Johnny Birchfield is a happier boy today, despite the handicap of being a victim of infantile paralysis. The blond youngster, who lives at 1450 Newton st., lost his pet canine recently, and his mother appealed for help in trying to find it. When Orchestra Leader Horace Heidt learned of the story, he sent his personal youth representative, Jerry Bowne (right), to Washington to round up another pup. The honor of turning over the 6-month-old blond cocker spaniel to Johnny went to Rickey Munger, 8, member of Metropolitan Police Boys Club No. 10, who was escorted to the ceremonies by Police Officer Conway McCurry.

Dr. Witkon Speaker

Radio, Television Man Named to State Post

Robert W. Ehrman, formerly promotion and circulation manager of Teleguide television magazine and for five years a producer-director for Radio Station WTOP, has been appointed public affairs officer in the State Department's International Information and Educational Exchange Program. He will work in the press, radio, film and cultural phases of the Office of Near Eastern and African Affairs.

New Trial Ordered in Purse Theft as Another Confesses

A man convicted of a robbery charge was granted a new trial yesterday after it was revealed his 16-year-old brother admitted the crime.

The man, Robert W. Warner, 24, who gave his address as 806 M st. nw., was convicted by a District Court jury of snatching a pocketbook containing $3 cash and a $25 watch from Mary T. Folta, 1220 Shepherd st. nw., last February 6.

The victim was able to give only a sketchy description of her assailant. But a used-goods dealer, Meyer Wertlieb, identified Warner as the man who had sold him a woman's watch for $3 several hours after the robbery.

Wertlieb, whose store is situated at 1228 7th st. nw., said the seller gave the name of Robert W. Warner and his address as 806 M st. nw. The watch was identified as the one which was stolen.

Warner's attorney, Lester D. Reber, filed motion for a new trial after Warner said that his younger brother, now an inmate of the National Training School, might have used Warner's name at the used goods store.

On instructions from Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws, Prosecutor Arthur McLaughlin interviewed the juvenile. At first, McLaughlin reported, the lad denied the robbery but later admitted guilt.

On the strength of this, Laws, remarking that "a reasonable doubt" exists in his mind as to Warner's guilt, set January 23 as the date for a new trial and released Warner in personal bond under orders to report weekly to the probation office. Warner had been in jail since his arrest last March, Reber said.

McCloy and Wife Escape Brick Fall

Cologne, Germany, Dec. 17 (AP).—United States High Commissioner John J. McCloy and his wife escaped injury today when bomb-weakened bricks fell into a church where they were attending a Christmas program.

One person was reported injured.

A howling snowstorm dislodged the bricks from near the top of St. Kunivertus Church, which was hit hard in the war.

One hundred German children were singing in the church at the time. Their thin voices hardly could be heard above the noise of the storm blowing over the old Rhine city.

Nurse at Garfield Suffers Burns

vere damage to adjoining rooms. A large portion of the roof was burned out, and water damage was extensive on both floors.

Sergt. Richard O'Connor of the Fire Marshal's office, said a preliminary investigation indicated the blaze probably was caused by a cigarette or a short-circuited radio. Miss Bruno, he said, denied she had been smoking.

Was Half Asleep

The nurse told a reporter she was "half asleep" when she noticed the fire. She said she had arrived at the dormitory about 4 a. m., after attending the annual party for nurses given by doctors at the Hotel 2400.

"I woke up and found my room was on fire,' she said. "It was burning along the sides of the walls."

Miss Bruno said she ran from her room, awoke Mrs. Adine Harris, a nurse whose room is directly across the hall from her, and then ran downstairs and phoned in the alarm. "I have no idea how the fire started," she said.

Even as barefooted Mrs. Harris was pounding on doors to rouse the sleeping nurses, aid came from several other persons.

William Gerecke, 27, a hospital ambulance driver, said he was parked near the nurse's home with Nurse Pat Rogers, 22, whom he had escorted to the party.

When Miss Rogers noticed the fire, Gerecke helped awaken the nurses and then tried to stem the blaze with a fire extinguisher. He was joined by Joseph Middleton, 25, the hospital's night admitting officer; Charles Tyler, elevator operator, and Daniel Grayson, 31, the night watchman.

First Tries a Pillow

The men dashed up and down the corridors of the dormitory, shouting "Fire," and spreading the alarm. Their efforts to combat the fire—Gerecke said he used a pillow at first—were unavailing.

Nurse Barbara Hunter, 20, who was slumbering on the first floor, heard the shouts and moved fast. She said she got up, put on a coat, grabbed her clothing and rushed out.

Then she turned around and went back, she said, to get her Christmas presents and some jewelry.

Another nurse, Miss Betty Trollinger, 21, hovered solicitously over her sisters, garbed in an outsize coat someone lent her and boots furnished by a fireman.

The first alarm came in at 5:14 a. m., according to fire department headquarters, followed by the second at 5:19 a. m. Eight engine companies (numbers 4, 9, 11, 24, 12, 21, 6 and 2) and three truck companies (trucks 4, 6 and 9) responded, along with two battalion chiefs and rescue squad No. 2.

The fire was brought under control in half an hour. Only fireman injured was Pvt. W. G. Ash, of No. 4 Truck Company, who sustained hand cuts. He was treated on the scene by the rescue squad.

Hospital Administrator Leo G. Schmelzer estimated damage at $10,000. He said the building, which is partially vacated and houses only nine nurses, is worth around $40,000. Because of the near-block distance of the home from the hospital, there was no danger to patients, he said.

Nurses who were roused from their beds by the fire were Misses Barbara Hunter, Betty Trollinger, Grace Snyder, Dorothy Gehring, and Tillie McPheeters, all of whom live on the first floor; and, besides Miss Bruno and Mrs. Harris, Miss Joyce Eggleston, who live on the second floor.

pouring from the apartment door. He said he turned in an alarm and then went though the hallways banging on doors and shouting "Fire."

Prevented Tragedy, Woman Says

Mrs. Eva Defoe, 48, one of the residents in the place who escaped with her daughter, Geraldine, said afterward that "If it hadn't been for that young man, we'd have had quite a tragedy here."

Miss Camille Allensworth, 48, a piano teacher, who lives with her 79-year-old mother, Mrs. Eva Allensworth, was lowered by firemen on a rope from her second-floor apartment window.

Miss Allensworth said she had been seriously ill until recently, that her mother is partly deaf. She said she was awakened by Holmes' pounding and cries of fire and when she opened he apartment door, a burst of smoke came into the room.

When firemen arrived, she said, she insisted that her mother be rescued first, and the mother insisted that she be taken out first because of her recent illness. The firemen finally lowered her first, then helped Mrs. Allensworth down a ladder.

Both were taken to Emergency Hospital, where Miss Allensworth was treated for shock, and released. She and her mother were at the home of a brother, Robert S. Allensworth, 10615 Amherst ave., Silver Spring, yesterday. Miss Allensworth praised police and firemen.

Among others who escaped were Mrs. Winnie Skouras, 28, and her son, Thomas, 8; Mrs. Marje Winston, and her sister, Miss Lucille Smith, and Miss Katherine Morrison.

Lieut. Charles Lechault, attached to the fire marshal's office, began an investigation of the blaze. He said it apparently started in a vestibule beneath a rear stairway on the first floor. Part of the stairs was consumed, he said, and paint was blistered on woodwork and doors clear to the third floor.

Lieutenant Lechault said exact cause has not yet been determined, but he believed the fire could have started from smoker's carelessness or from defective wiring.

There are a restaurant and several stores on the ground floor of the building. They sustained smoke and water damage, as did a number of the apartments on the second and third floors. Most of the actual fire damage was confined to the stairways.

Lieutenant Lechault said the investigation will continue into origin of the blaze, and that a damage estimate will be made later. Firemen said there was no janitor or engineer on duty in the building at the time.

asked him to put it in writing and said he would ask Chief Bunn to file his version, too. Monday a committee will be appointed to study the issue.

Chief Mayhew said the present policy is for the home-acre chief to run the show and for the others to provide assistance as requested.

The cause of the dispute—the burning house—was damaged an estimated $5000, according to the owner. A neighbor, Richard Brown, 40, 4535 Wheeler rd., suffered a fractured ankle fighting the blaze and a Silver Hill Volunteer Fire Department member, Sergt. Frank Keller, was overcome by smoke.

Phone Rate Hearing

A hearing before the District Public Utilities Commission on proposed increased telephone rates will resume Monday at 10 a. m. in Room 203, District Building. Earlier, it was announced the session would begin at 1 p. m.

34 Seized in Big Dope Raids To Break Up Sales to Pupils

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—A small army of Federal narcotics agents staged lightning raids last night and early today against dope peddlers reportedly preying on high school children.

Armed with suppressed warrants and secret indictments, the agents struck in all parts of the city. They seized at least 29 men and five women in the biggest roundup of dope peddlers in Chicago's history.

Radio-directed squads swooped down on the dope dens, in many cases routing the accused persons from their beds.

The Government agents reported complaints from parents that marijuana, heroin, cocaine and morphine were being sold to their teen-age children.

A Federal grand jury voted 27 indictments yesterday naming between 80 and 120 persons suspected of illegal importation or distribution of drugs.

United States Attorney Otto Kerner, jr., and Robert W. Artis, agent in charge of the Chicago nacotics office, said they had been laying the groundwork for the raid for four months.

Agents estimated unofficially that nearly 60 ounces of narcotics valued at $26,000 were seized in the raids. At least 50 agents took part in the roundup.

CHRISTMAS 'ROUND THE WORLD

Begins Monday In The Washington Post

Ever wonder why Santa Claus comes down the chimney? Did you know that in some countries he is a bishop . . . a wrinkled grandmother who brings switches as well as gifts . . . or three kings? Have you heard how Russia is trying to change ancient Christmas rites?

Starting Monday in The Washington Post, enjoy this different kind of Christmas story—the fascinating tale of Yuletide customs everywhere. Richard M. Barr unfolds the facts in six appealing articles.

Don't miss the story of "Christmas 'Round the World," Monday, December 19 through Saturday in The Washington Post.

38 Intern Openings Here Remain Unfilled

By N. S. Haseltine
Post Reporter

Washington hospitals, beset with financial problems, also bear another problem which money alone can't cure—a shortage of interns.

The plight of the local hospitals was pointed up last night in release of a survey conducted by the Hospital Council of the National Capital Area. It shows that 38 openings in nine hospitals have been unfilled.

The nine hospitals, all accredited to take on medical-school graduates for internships, had 140 openings on November 15. Like other hospitals throughout the country, they invited considerably more than that number of graduates to sign up with them. Acceptances totaled 102.

The shortage ratio, however, is not confined to the Washington area but is Nation-wide, it was pointed out. In Connecticut, for example, 18 hospitals sought to fill 160 openings and filled 116.

Hardest hit are the small hospitals not affiliated with medical schools. But so great is the shortage that not even all the large teaching hospitals can fill their intern quotas.

Washington's three university hospitals, Georgetown, George Washington and Freedmen's, got the highest share of acceptances, the survey pointed out. Of the 102 new interns, 45 will serve in these institutions, leaving only six vacancies.

Other general hospitals affiliated with the council and large enough to have approved internship training programs include Alexandria, Emergency, Gallinger, Garfield, Providence and Sibley hospitals. For their 89 openings the six hospitals received 57 acceptances.

Reason for the national shortage of interns is apparent at a statistical glance, said a spokesman for the council. He pointed out that the Nation's hospitals need 9500 interns each year; the medical schools graduate about 5500.

The situation is eased somewhat, he added, by the fact that about 1000 of the intern vacancies are being filled by graduates of foreign schools and interns who agree to serve a second year.

The average medical school graduate, it was pointed out, lists his preference in this order: at a large university hospital, a large municipal hospital, in the armed services, and finally, in other hospitals. Their reasons are not the size and reputation of the institution alone but in the nature of their teaching experience.

University and municipal hospitals care for large numbers of service cases, patients under ward care who pay no doctor's fee. These are assigned to the intern, who treats them under supervision of the senior staff members. In such hospitals the medical school graduate knows he can get plenty of experience in treating patients.

The armed services are especially attractive to medical school graduates, particularly those who are married, because their internships offer higher pay and special allowances not offered in general hospitals.

Specialties Overcrowded

Specialty hospitals, such as Children's Hospital and the Episcopal Eye, Ear, Nose and Throat Hospital, consistently have more applicants than they can accept. This, it was explained, is the result of the urge to specialize.

The same desire, however, helps those general hospitals big enough to divide their services into more than the three usual divisions—medicine, surgery and obstetrics. Doctors who have completed internship are willing to continue service under residency training positions at only slightly more pay than they received as interns, and some will serve for as long as five years to meet experience qualifications for specialty board examinations.

Smaller general hospitals will feel the pinch this year, and in all probability for many years to come. Perhaps their best solution, a hospital administrator said, is to affiliate with a large teaching hospital or medical school who will "farm out" its interns to the small hospitals on a short-term rotation basis.

Arlington Hospital, in Arlington, Va., has a limited arrangement with Georgetown University Medical School in which the hospital provides experience for the medical students who in turn ease the hospital's intern shortage.

All He Wants for Christmas

Tommy Morrison, who lost an arm as the result of a Halloween party fire, selects a big stocking to hang near his bed in Children's Hospital

Tommy's Reply to Medicine: 'O. K., Let's Get It Over With'

By Bill Brinkley
Post Reporter

Out at Children's Hospital they're calling 5-year-old Tommy Morrison "Our Number 1 hero."

That doesn't begin to tell it. You've got to see that fighting sign over his bed in West 2: "Let's get it over with."

Tommy is the North Carolina boy who was burned raw over 60 percent of his body when he got too near a Halloween jack-o-lantern a year ago.

What that sign means is that the chart on Tommy "looks like two Washington phone books," that he's had 25 skin grafts, 32 dressings and 57 transfusions.

What it means is that he's ready for another skin graft any time the doctors are. There's nothing phony about that sign. His 12-year-old sister gave it to him and is summarizes everything Tommy feels, and all he is, and his incredible courage.

And along with courage, an astounding maturity. In speaking of the delays sometimes necessitated by the nature of his case, Tommy said yesterday:

"It makes us so angry—because we want to get it over with."

By "us" he meant himself and his nurse. Tommy's in such a hurry he doesn't wait for the boys in the lab"—that's what he calls them—to come to him for blood tests. He walks down to the lab himself.

"We get our finger pricked," Nurse Phyllis Wood was saying. "It's punch, punch, punch. Lots of time Tommy doesn't say a thing—just sticks out his finger."

"And don't say one word," Tommy said. "I don't even jump."

The other day he did show he thought turnabout is fair play.

"I want you to get me a punching outfit," he told Nurse Wood, "so I can go down and work on those boys in the lab."

With skin from his abdomen and legs grafted onto his neck and back, Tommy has made progress that's astounding to one who hadn't seen him since his birthday party since last August.

Now he cocks his sailor hat on his head and "inspects" the hospital twice a day—dining room to kitchen to night watchman to "the boys in the lab."

He stops to chat with the night-watchman. The other evening the watchman's head was turned when a mother arrived at the hospital with a child patient. Tommy obliged with the directions to the dispensary he's often heard the watchman give: "All the way down the hall and turn to the right."

Since his birthday he's learned that he has only one hand left from the fire.

He took this discovery, as he has taken everything, with something that can only be called high courage—with, perhaps, a leavening of stoicism. He counted the fingers on his one hand and asked the doctor: "Did I have that many on the other hand, too?"

He's come a long way from those agonizing months when they didn't even know if he would live. Big thing he's looking forward to now is Christmas, naturally.

The other day Tommy announced what he wanted from Santa Claus. What he said had big meaning because there was some apprehension the accident might leave fears in him about fire. Apparently not.

For Tommy Morrison said he wanted for Christmas: "A fire engine with a bell and siren."

Experts Study Cancer Drive Applications

Some 110 of the Nation's leading cancer research scientists convened at Hotel Statler here yesterday to review applications for 1950 research support.

A smaller group met separately to promote American representation of the Fifth International Cancer Research Congress, in Paris, next July. A chief problem of this group, it was explained, is to raise funds to send promising American scientists to the congress.

Considering the applications for cancer research support were members of the Committee on Growth, National Research Council. The committee guides the American Cancer Society in allocating research funds to universities, hospitals and other institutions. Cancer funds available for 1950 distribution total $1,950,000, according to Dr. Milton C. Winternitz of Chicago, committee chairman.

Mother, Unborn Child Wounded Still Live

Hendersonville, N. C., Dec. 17 (AP)—A mother and her infant daughter, delivered by Caesarian section after both were wounded by the same bullet, clung to life in a hospital here today.

The woman, Mrs. Alexander Pope McAllister, has made no statement since she was found in her home Thursday night an illegible note nearby. The hospital reported her irrational today.

Six Die Here In Accidents At Homes

Six District residents, one a 66-year-old woman who fell while walking in her sleep, died last week because of home accidents, the District Red Cross Accident Prevention Service reported yesterday.

Among the fatalities were two other persons who fell down, two who died from smoking accidents and an infant who suffocated from aspiration of milk.

Hospitals received an additional 118 persons injured in home accidents.

The Red Cross list included a 77-year-old man who fell down some steps and fractured his hip, several bathtub falls, a 44-year-old woman who fell over an oil stove and severely burned her arms and stomach, and a woman who burned her scalp while leaning over a hot plate.

Children were accidentally poisoned from eating or drinking lysol, flit, liver pills, crayons, camphorated oil, sulfa tablets, ink and aspirin. A 3-year-old boy swallowed a marble and another youth a plastic button.

One dogbite and two catbites were reported, and a 12-year-old boy severed a tendon when he cut his hand in breaking a glass door.

Comparative figures showed 5882 injuries and 210 deaths to date for 1949, with 5731 injuries and 241 deaths reported to date in 1948.

Stunt Man Killed Demonstrating Bad Auto Driving

Pittsburgh, Dec. 17 (AP).—Death stalked a speech by the Better Traffic Committee's Safety Santa Claus today as two stunt men staged a fake auto wreck to show spectators how not to drive.

Something went wrong. One of the stunt men was injured fatally and the other was hospitalized.

Henry Neaman, 26, of Pittsburgh died a few hours after he was pulled from the wreck. His partner, Dwight Harris, 18, also of Pittsburgh, is in fair condition.

The wreck was to dramatize a speech by the committee's safety Santa Claus. The two stunt men started driving their cars together head-on.

"Something went wrong," a witness related. "Harris was supposed to jump off. There was a mix-up and the cars collided with both drivers aboard."

Business Outlook

By J. A. Livingston

Rebirth of Business Confidence

This will be a Merry Christmas in Wall Street. The stock market is at the top of a six months advance. Since 1914, only six "uninterrupted" upswings have lasted longer.

The lure of dividends of 5 percent, 6 percent, 7 percent and higher is whittling away at the once-burned, twice-cautious heritage of 1929. Why, people ask, sock everything away in savings banks at, say, 2 percent, or in United States savings bonds at 2⅞ percent, when you can buy General Motors or Standard Oil of New Jersey to yield twice as much?

Livingston

The boom in sales of shares of mutual investment funds—up 30 percent over 1948—is proof of revived public interest in Wall Street. These shares enable a small investor to buy a package of securities at once. And he doesn't have to worry, as he does when he buys a stock of a single company, that maybe he's picking a lemon.

Of course, investor interest in mutual shares isn't spontaneous. Securities salesmen can make a real effort—going from house to house if need be—to sell them. The over-all commission runs around 7 percent to 8 percent, is many times greater than that on the sale of a stock listed on the New York Stock Exchange. Naturally, the buyer pays this "load," but gets in exchange diversification and continuous management.

Brokers are enjoying the stock market. On Wednesday, for instance, 2,200,000 shares were traded on the New York Exchange. Most securities firms can make a good living at that rate. Earlier in the year, trading was at the starvation level of one million shares a day or less.

The revival in Wall Street represents, in part at least, a rebirth in confidence in business. Ever since the stock market break in September, 1946, the cry was that the United States had to have a major postwar depression. But now people generally are assuming it won't come at all.

First Half Okay, Second Half Obscure

Winfield Riefler, assistant to the chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, last week said in Cleveland that business "will remain strong through the first half of 1950." That is the general expectation for next year: First half okay, second half obscure. The danger is that people will take the whole year for granted—as good.

Heretofore, in the postwar period, businessmen have been so fearful of a 1920-21 repeat performance that they've held down inventories, been cautious in buying policies, and tried to figure all of the contingencies that lay ahead. Their caution has been the country's insurance policy against a major postwar depression.

But now, if optimism becomes rampant, if, in the early months of 1950, spending by veterans of the insurance repayments leads to heavy buying of inventories by retailers, wholesalers, and manufacturers, if steel companies boost prices, if a stock market advance adds to the general feeling of "all's well with the world," then the second half could well be what so many have been waiting for—the bad news.

By the end of summer the automobile market is apt to be a bit saggy. Thus, 1950 will be the first postwar year in which a give-and-take market will exist in virtually all major products: Autos, housing, industrial machinery, steel, and so on. Hence, the economy is more vulnerable than it was when such major industries as steel, autos, and housing were still bolstered by we-have-to-have-it-now demand.

Moreover, the supply of goods coming on the United States market from abroad is likely to increase—as a consequence of devaluation of the pound and other currencies. United States imports rose in October to 559 million dollars from 530 million dollars in September. Back in July, they were only 456 million dollars.

An Extra Yule Shopping Day

At the same time, United States exports have declined. At 849 million dollars in October, they were at the lowest level in three years, aside from the maritime-strike month of November, 1948 (see chart). As European and other nations get on their economic feet, they need less from the United States and are able to sell more. In 1950, the drop in foreign demand and the increase in supply could tend to aggravate deflationary forces—should they develop.

Meanwhile, the Christmas trade outlook is cheering. Department store sales for the week ended December 10 were off only 4 percent from the corresponding week of 1948. The decline for the year to date has been 6 percent. But in view of lower prices, this year, actual merchandise sold—the number of transactions—is as high or higher than last year.

Not only that, but merchants will get in an extra sales day this Christmas. The corresponding week of 1948 was December 11. There were only 11 shopping days left till the 25th, as against 12 days this year. And the last day before Christmas 1949 is Saturday.

So Christmas in the stores could close with a whoosh. Sales in the week of the 24th ought to run 15 percent ahead of last year. And total Christmas results—since Thanksgiving—should not be far behind year-ago dollar totals, in spite of the slow start.

New York Cotton

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Cotton futures closed 20 to 35 cents a bale higher today. Trading was small.

Prices started steady and continued to work upward, closing at the day's best levels. Trade buying centered in nearby deliveries, with commission house buying in deferred contracts. Demand was associated with pending export business for textile mill account as well as prospects for reduced cotton acreage next year.

News that farmers voted favorably on the 1950 cotton crop restrictions stimulated buying of deferred deliveries.

Further allocations to foreign countries contributed to the higher trend.

Continental Baking Honors Veteran Aides

By S. Oliver Goodman

Eighty-four Washington employes of Continental Baking Co. were honored last night at a silver anniversary dinner in the Hamilton Hotel.

Luttes

The employes, all of whom have been with the company since it was founded 25 years ago, received engraved silver trays and were made charter members of the Quarter Century Club. Two are women and the rest men.

James B. Luttes, regional manager of Continental Baking Co., presided at the party and was presented with a tray by John Young, production superintendent here. Young also received a tray.

The baking firm employs about 600 workers here in three plants and a regional office. The Wonder Bakery on Georgia ave. was formerly known as the Corby Bakery. It was taken over by Continental in 1924. The County Fair Bakery on S st. dates back more than 100 years and was formerly known as the Havenner Bakery. The Hostess Cake Kitchen on Trumbull st. was established in 1925. Regional offices are at 1010 Vermont ave.

HONORED: James R. Kirkland, recently appointed a member of the bench of the United States District Court here, was honored last week by the District of Columbia Institute of Certified Public Accountants. Judge Kirkland was presented with a plaque and an honorary life membership in the CPA group. He is believed to be the first certified public accountant on the United States District Court bench here.

MEETINGS: Dr. Titus L. Podea, executive vice president of the Economic Institute, Inc., will address a meeting Tuesday night of the local Controllers Institute of America in the Carlton Hotel . . . Washington Chapter, Society of Residential Appraisers, will elect officers Monday night at the annual meeting in the Burlington Hotel . . . Fred A. Smith will preside at a meeting Tuesday noon of the executive council of the D. C. Building & Loan League.

NOISES: Troubles in motor vehicles have been classified into seven basic sounds. These are squeak, rattle, thump, grind, knock, scrape and hiss. General Motors is distributing standardized lists which are expected to assist mechanics in locating the trouble more quickly. (Curiously enough, chatter is not listed as a basic noise.)

OFFICERS: Edward W. Hase of the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad was elected president of the Washington Passenger Association. Other officers include Howard C. Clayton, Pennsylvania Railroad, first vice president; F. S. Lemley, Chicago & North Western, second vice president, and D. L. Hare, Baltimore & Ohio, secretary-treasurer. Executive committee will include R. W. Bashor, J. H. Lamon and H. C. Curtis.

BUILDING: Washington building permits in the first 11 months this year amounted to $73,427,519, a gain of 56 percent over the like 1948 period, according to Dun & Bradstreet. This city ranked sixth in the Nation in this respect, according to the research agency. Ahead of the District of Columbia in permits' dollar volume were New York, Los Angeles, Detroit, Chicago and Houston.

1940 ELECTION: The National Capital Used Car Dealers Association, Inc., elected the following officers at its annual election: Grover T. Smith, president; J. Dewey Rice, first vice president; Jim Agner, second vice president; and Richard S. Moore, secretary-treasurer. The following were elected directors: Michael Wolfe, James Hoyle, R. R. Macgregor and Marion Morton.

Chicago Grain

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—A forecast for rain or snow over a wide area of the winter wheat belt depressed new-crop wheat on the Board of Trade today. Old crop contracts, after spurting in early dealings, retreated to close with little price change.

Other grains did not move much either way, but lard came up with a show of pronounced strength. This was particularly true of the December contract. While gains were smaller for the deferred months May and July went to new highs since trading in them started.

Wheat closed unchanged to 1⅛ lower, corn was unchanged to ⅜ lower, oats were 3@ lower to ⅛ higher, rye was ⅛ to ½ higher, soybeans were 1@1¼ lower and lard was 7 to 67 cents a hundred pounds higher.

The upturn in lard futures was supported by continued gains in loose lard. At the close buyers were bidding 10.12½ a hundred pounds for loose lard, up 50 cents on the day and 1.62½ cents above the low scored earlier this week.

According to trade reports the Production and Marketing Administration would enter the lard market early next week to buy for Germany and Austria. In addition, it was said the Army would take around six million pounds for shipment to bi-zone Germany.

Union Trust Co. Has 50th Birthday Today

The Union Trust Co., on its fiftieth birthday today, reports assets in excess of 48 million dollars and more than 51,000 depositors.

Originally known as the Union Trust & Storage Co., the first office was in the old Willard Hotel building at 14th and F sts. nw. Customers entered over a wooden bridge which spanned a deep areaway between sidewalk and doorway. These temporary quarters were replaced early in 1901 by a three-story building at 1414 F st.

In 1907, the institution completed a nine-story bank and office building at the corner of 15th and H sts. which it still occupies.

In 1947 the Union Trust Co. purchased the Citizens Bank of Washington which has since been operated as the 14th and G st. branch.

First president was Edward J. Stellwagon, who resigned in 1932 after 33 years of service. He was succeeded by Ord Preston who retired in 1945. S. William Miller was the next president. He served until 1948, when he became vice chairman of the board. Linwood P. Harrell has been president since.

Lukens Steel to Cut Costs by Electrifying

Coatesville, Pa., Dec. 17 (AP).—Lukens Steel Co. announced today it will close down its 206 inch rolling mill January 22 for 90 days during which the power plant will be converted from steam to electricity.

Most of the rolling normally handled by the 206-inch mill will be handled on the company's 140-inch mill, which has been electrified. The company said the changeover on the larger mill should effect substantial economies, pointing out that electrification of the 140-inch mill reduced the cost of power nearly 50 percent.

Beginning of an Amphitheater . . .

The Washington Post

GROUND-BREAKING CEREMONY — Interior Secretary Oscar Chapman lifts the first shovel full of dirt at the site in Rock Creek Park where the Sesquicentennial Amphitheater will be erected. Participating in the ceremony yesterday are (from left) Edward Boykin, director of the National Capital Sesquicentennial Commission; Joseph C. McGarraghy, chairman of the executive committee of the NCSC, and Claudia Pinza, Metropolitan opera star number is "the largest audience which could be comfortably seated and be able to see the performance on the stage." The back row will be 180 feet from the stage.

The stage is huge—148 feet wide, with a 78-foot proscenium, the area between the sidewalls of the stage. The stage is 76½ feet deep. Such an area not only will allow free play for the symphonic drama now being written for the sesqui by Paul Green, North Carolina Pulitizer Prize winning playwright, but for ballet, the largest of symphony orchestras or the biggest of musical comedies.

The stage has no curtains; changes in scenery will be made in the dark through the use of great spotlights (mounted on poles on either side of the amphitheater). Since the stage has two smaller side stages, it will be possible to have a continuous performance at a night show.

The stage will be of concerte, probably a light gray, and will be so constructed that three elevating stages can be installed later, if desired.

The only backdrop to the stage will be the great forest in which the theater will be located. Haussmann said yesterday he is counting on the circle of trees to control the acoustics, along with a series of amplifiers.

Entrance to the amphitheater will be on Colorado ave., with a subsidiary entrance on Morrow dr. Spectators will buy or show their tickets at a gate some 200 feet from the seating area, then walk through the woods on a 20-foot path.

At the rear of the seats will be a long shelter area in case of thunderstorms. But, Haussman said, only about 2500 of the maximum of 4000 spectators will be able to crowd into the shelters. A few hundred more could run from the rain in the buildings on either side of the stage. The rest will be out of luck.

At yesterday's dedication, in chilly morning weather, the Army band and chorus were a notable success and Miss Claudia Pinza, Metropolitan Opera star and daughter of "South Pacific's" Ezio Pinza, was on hand for "Some Enchanted Evening" and other numbers.

Chapman, declaring the amphitheater would be "a lasting symbol of the faith of freedom and equality," said we must make sure "that opportunity for every individual is limited only by the individual himself—his character, his willingness to work and his own capacity for success."

Green said he intends to show in his drama, now about half finished, that George Washington's aims were international in character. He said he thinks Washington himself must have walked through the Rock Creek woods near the amphitheater site when he was laying out the District of Columbia.

N. Y. Firm Expected To Underwrite Fair

The Sesquicentennial Commission is expected soon to sign an agreement under which a New York syndicate will guarantee the financial success of the Freedom Fair up to at least 15 million dollars.

The big Washington show in 1950-51 is expected to gross around 30 million dollars, Sesqui officials say, but the guarantee fund is designed to cover only the minimum expenses of the fair.

The Federal Diary

by Jerry Klutz

Glossary of Federalese Compiled for Official In Hunt for Simplicity

STORY: A Federal official had his staff under fire for weeks to write an article for a professional journal under his name. His people thought their job was well done. But the official went over it to write in all the Government words and phrases they had tried hard to avoid. After the article appeared the official received an anonymous glossary of Government words and terms in the mail, some new and some old, but all interesting. It follows:

A PROGRAM—Any assignment that can't be completed by one phone call.

CHANNELS—The trail left by an interoffice memo.

STATUS QUO—This mess we're in.

TO EXPEDITE — To confound confusion with commotion.

EXPEDITER — One who does same while riding fast trains and staying at good hotels.

EFFICIENCY EXPERT—A guy who trains expediters.

COORDINATOR — A guy who has a desk between two expediters.

LIAISON OFFICER—A person who talks well and listens better, but has no authority to make a definite statement.

CRITERIA — Measures which the other guy uses to underestimate what you have already overestimated the deal to be worth.

INCENTIVE PROGRAM — A scheme to titillate a submerged urge.

TO ACTIVATE—To make carbons and add names to the memorandum.

UNDER CONSIDERATION — Never heard of it.

UNDER ACTIVE CONSIDERATION—We're looking in the files for it.

IN TRANSMITTAL — We're sending it to you because we're tired of holding the bag.

A CONFERENCE — A place where conversation is substituted for the dreariness of labor and the loneliness of thought.

A CLARIFICATION—To fill in the background so detailed that the foreground must go underground.

A MODIFICATION OF POLICY—To complete reversal which nobody admits.

TO SPELL OUT—To break big hunks of gobbledygook down into little hunks of gobbldygook.

SYNTHESIS — A compounding of detailed bewilderment into a vast and comfortable confusion which offends no one.

PROCEDURE—Everyday routine rigmarole.

LETTER OF TRANSMITTAL—A way to pass the buck.

A SURVEY IS BEING MADE ON THIS—We need more time to think of an answer.

FURTHER SUBSTANTIATING DATA NECESSARY—We've lost your stuff. Send it again.

TO EXPLORE THE RAMIFICATIONS—And brother, just wait till you see what we think of.

CONFIDENTIAL MEMORANDUM—There wasn't time to mimeograph this.

NOTE AND INITIAL—Let's spread the responsibility for this.

SEE ME, OR "LET'S DISCUSS" Come down to my office, I'm lonesome.

LET'S GET TOGETHER ON THIS—I'm assuming you're as confused as I am.

GIVE US THE BENEFIT OF YOUR PRESENT THINKING—We'll listen to what you have to say as long as it doesn't interfere with what we're already decided to do.

REFERRED FOR APPROPRIATE ACTION—Maybe your office knows what to do with this.

REFERRED TO A HIGHER AUTHORITY—Pigeonholed in a more sumptuous office.

TO GIVE SOMEONE THE PICTURE—A long confused and inaccurate statement to a newcomer.

TO MASTERMIND—To avoid blame for not doing while getting credit for the doing of others.

RESEARCH WORK — Hunting for the guy who moved the files.

POINT UP THE ISSUE—Expand one page to 15 pages.

FUNCTIONAL CONTROL—You tell him what to do and he'll tell you where to go.

COMMITTEE — A group that keeps minutes and wastes hours.

RESEARCH—Dragging data out of an inaccessible place, tabulating them, and then filing them in equally inaccessible place.

RESEARCH—Copying from one book is plagiarism; copying from two books is research.

AN ECONOMIST—An economist is a man who tells you what to do with the money that you would not have if you had followed his proposals.

A STATISTICIAN—A statistician is a man who draws a mathematically precise line from an unwarranted assumption to a foregone conclusion.

A PROFESSOR—A professor is a man who tells you how to solve the problems of life which he has avoided by becoming a professor.

A CONFERENCE—A conference is a group of people who individually can do nothing but who can meet collectively and agree that nothing can be done.

A CONSULTANT—A consultant is a man who tells you how to run your business and charges you more for his services than you could possibly make out of your business if you ran it right instead of the way he told you to run it.

AN EXPERT—An expert is a person who avoids all the small errors as he sweeps forward to the grand fallacy.

AN ADMINISTRATIVE ANALYST—An administrative analyst is a man who, if asked to perform an appendectomy, would approach it through the mouth.

D. C. Church Groups Offer Study of Day Care Plan

Reply Lifts Chance Units May Assume Burden of Tasks Now Under District

By Richard L. Lyons

Post Reporter

Washington churches may solve the controversial question of what to do with the child day care program by taking it off the District's hands.

In a letter to the Commissioners released yesterday, the Washington Federation of Churches offered to explore the possibility that Protestant churches "might be willing to develop and assume responsibility for a program for preschool children."

In another letter the Jewish Community Council of Washington offered to study ways "of coping with . . . the need for additional facilities . . . for the education and care of children of preschool age."

The letters were sent by the executive secretaries of each group and did not commit their organizations beyond the offer to make a study.

Set Up During War

The child day care program was set up during the war by the Federal Government to free women for war work. In 1946 the Government withdrew its support, but the program has been continued on a year-to-year basis under the District Welfare Department.

The Welfare Department doesn't want it because it puts an added strain on the department's already inadequate public assistance program. Nor does the school system want it.

Six centers now provide day care for about 300 children from the ages of 2 to 10 from low-income families where the mother must work.

Suggestion to the church groups that they study the possibility of taking over the program came from Rabbi Norman Gerstenfeld, a member of the Board of Public Welfare.

Rabbi Gerstenfeld would like to see the churches do much more than just take over the day care program.

"Terrific Opportunity"

He sees it as "a terrific opportunity for the churches to do a job with children of preschool age in a way that would not be a tax burden on the community."

He would have the churches offer nursery school facilities and character training to children from all income brackets.

"The District's program takes care of only a handful of children at great expense," said Rabbi Gerstenfeld, "while the churches have empty buildings."

The District Commisisoners have on their desks a report from a committee of city officials—submitted before the church letters arrived—recommending the program be set up on a permanent basis.

However, District Budget Officer Walter L. Fowler, committee chairman, said his committee would consider it a "most happy solution" if the churches could take over the work.

The committee report reviewed objections to the present program—that it was originally an emergency war measure, it serves only a few persons, it overlaps welfare work and it invades the field of private charity and business.

Yet, it concluded that it should be continued, and set up on a permanent basis, because it affords a chance to earn a living for families who might otherwise be completely dependent upon relief.

Santa Hailed In Kensington Yule Parade

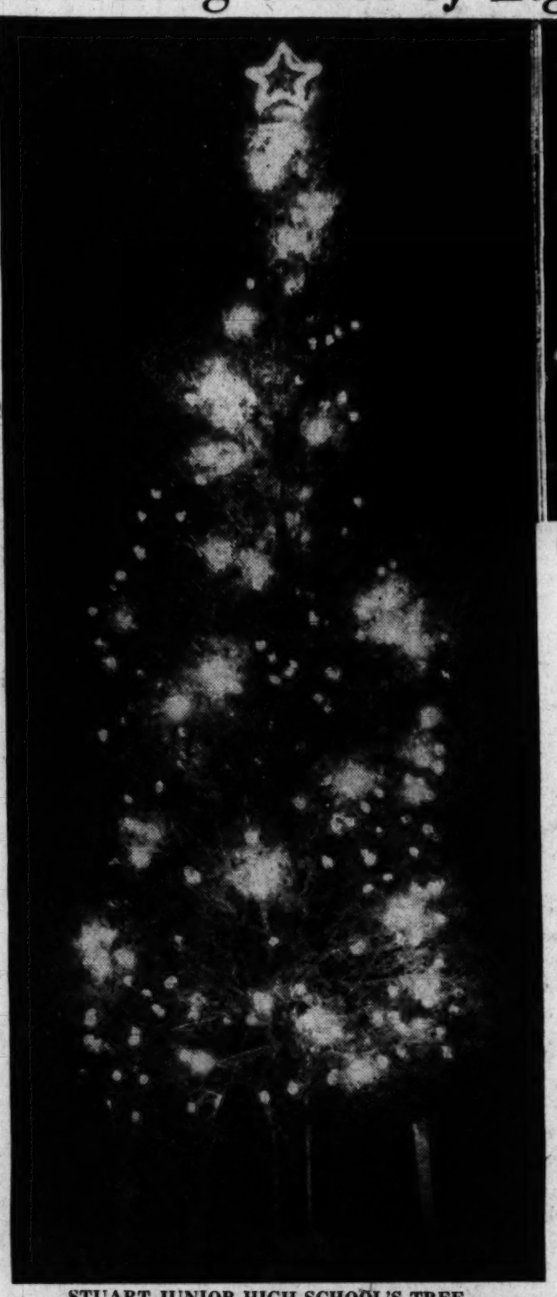
Santa Claus received a warm welcome yesterday from nearly 200 Kensington (Md.) children, who joined in a "kiddie parade" to mark formal arrival of the holiday season.

The jolly old fellow, riding on a fire engine, was escorted along a six-block parade route by the costumed youngsters, ranging in age from 18 months to 12 years, as a feature of the Kensington Chamber of Commerce's first annual community Christmas celebration.

Led by a police escort, the parade moved from the Kensington Bank to Ernest Park, where Santa distributed candy to his young admirers as they collected around the Kensington community Christmas tree.

A special prize—an album of children's phonograph recordings—was awarded to Esther Anne Elliott, who at 18 months was the youngest marcher in the parade. Bundled up in a bunny rabbit costume, she toddled the full length of the parade route.

Throwing a Lot of Light on the Christmas Subject



STUART JUNIOR HIGH SCHOOL'S TREE

LIGHTED GREETINGS ABOVE JELLEFF'S DEPARTMENT STORE ON F ST.

IT IS when night settles its black cloak across the city that Christmas is spelled out in a display of jewel-like splendor.

Washington storefronts are etched in light displays.

A TOWERING evergreen which stands in bare dignity 50 weeks of the year is now arrayed in a gown of brilliance, warming the cold night with its message of Christmas.

The shoppers are gone and the streets have given way to more leisurely pedestrians and above one store shines a giant candle, symbolic of hope and faith.

And the lights of Christmas have come to the residential neighborhoods. Where once were streets of obscure stone and friendless gloom now are cheerful lanes proclaiming the Brotherhood of Man.

Merchants, Customers, Even Police All Smiles

Volume of Sales Equals or Exceeds All-Time High of Previous Saturday

By V. R. Montanari

Post Reporter

Hundreds of thousands of jovial Christmas shoppers, thronged downtown Washington streets and suburban business centers yesterday. Even more jovial area merchants reported a sales volume equalling or surpassing the previous Saturday's all-time peak.

Despite the milling crowds and the streams of motor traffic, police reported there were no tie-ups and one District traffic veteran said the people were so pleasant and orderly he was thoroughly enjoying his duty.

In the F st. shopping area, where crowds were largest, store salespeople, guards and information clerks were hard put to it to keep up with customers, who lined up two or three deep in some departments at the height of activity, in the early afternoon.

Santa Has Hands Full

Santa Claus had a terrific day. The lines of parents and youngsters waiting to see him stretched around and around, and they had to resign themselves to waits of up to an hour or more to see the fabulous red-garbed giver.

On the downtown streets, Salvation Army bells tinkled and bands played Christmas carols, small boys hawked shopping bags and loudspeakers voicing appeals for Christmas giving added to the air of excitement. The weather was just about perfect.

Business was definitely good. The spokesman for one of the major department stores in the District said the jammed counters and rapid sales pointed to an all-time record of Christmas shopping yesterday.

Another merchant reported "the second of two peak Saturdays" yesterday. Whether yesterday's volume exceeded that of last Saturday, which was at an all-time record, he wouldn't venture to say, he said, but it was comparable.

Dollar Volume Up, Too

Store officials agreed that sales activity thus far this year has been at a record-breaking pace. Though prices are lower, they said, the dollar volume is slightly ahead of last year's.

Capital Transit manned 56 extra buses and streetcars for the rush of shoppers to the downtown area—and the heavier rush back, with parcels.

Traffic police, bolstered by 34 rookies from the Metropolitan Police School assigned to 19 downtown intersections, kept traffic moving steadily.

Pvt. Isadore Fein, who has been on duty at 13th and F sts. nw. for the past four years, said he had never seen such smiling, well-mannered crowds as this year.

"The work has been smoother, the extra men from the Police school have helped a great deal, and both pedestrians and motorists seem to have the Christmas spirit this year," he declared. "I'm really enjoying even this shopping traffic duty, and I give the citizens a lot of the credit for it."

More Evenly Spread Out

Merchants also reported that shoppers were particularly good-natured this year. Though the heavy volume of shopping began a bit late in the season, as it did last year, it has been more evenly spread out during the six shopping days of each week, than usual, they said.

Opinions seemed to vary as to what "early shopping" means. While most shoppers yesterday wished they had done their Christmas shopping earlier, as usual, one male shopper with his arms full of bundles was heard to say, "I'm feeling pretty good, this year I didn't wait till the last minute."

The "last minute" will come this week, when merchants expect a lot of "odds and ends" to be purchased. Yesterday, the most popular departments were those selling toys, lingerie, men's furnishings and specialties such as jewelry and watches, store spokesmen reported.

Also well up in sales were television sets. As for toys, they were all popular, but the "most lethal" ones seemed to the most sought after, one merchant reported.

Silver Spring Busy

An all-time high was reported in the number of shoppers in Silver Spring as Montgomery County (Md.) police were concentrated in the shopping area.

In both Silver Spring and Bethesda, a great number of cars with District tags indicated Washington residents were trying to avoid the downtown rush. They found little better conditions in Montgomery County.

Merchants in Prince Georges County, Md., and in Alexandria and Arlington, Va., also reported a brisk Christmas trade, with police agreeing that traffic was heavy, though not unusually so for the season.

3000 Inmates To Eat Turkey On Christmas

More than 3000 inmates of District penal institutions will get a turkey dinner with all the customary trimmings on Christmas day, it was announced yesterday by Donald Clemmer, director of the Department of Corrections.

In addition, some will participate in carol singing, dramatics, and other special ceremonies. All eligible inmates will see two movies over the weekend instead of the customary one, Clemmer said.

At the reformatory for women at Occoquan, 60 inmates will present "The Christmas Pageant of the Holy Grail." At the reformatory for men at Lorton, carol singing will be accompanied by a newly installed organ.

From inmates at the District jail, 100 toy wagons manufactured in the machine shop out of scrap lumber and other scrap material will be taken as gifts to wards of the Board of Public Welfare.

Inmates of the institutions for men at Lorton and Occoquan and the one for women at Occoquan will be permitted to receive gift boxes from relatives containing certain selected articles and weighing not more than 4 pounds each. At Lorton, the men will get Christmas boxes from the administration, purchased from canteen profits. They will contain candy, fruit and cigarettes.

Total anticipated population of the institutions are: District Jail, 888; Lorton, 1219; Occoquan, 965 men and 159 women in separate institutions.

Fire Safety Rules Issued For Holiday

Some suggestion on how to prevent Christmas from becoming a time of tragedy were offered yesterday by Fire Chief J. A. Mayhew.

In his annual holiday warning message on fire safety, Chief Mayhew asked citizens to follow these precautions:

Make sure that all decorations used in the home or business are fireproof, especially tree ornaments made of plastic or paper.

Do not spread cotton under the tree if it has not been flameproofed.

When selecting a location for the tree do not expose it to a source of ignition or place it where it will block the avenue of escape from the room.

The tree should be secured against falling with inconspicuous wires.

Be sure Christmas tree electric light wires and connections are in good condition. Try them out and make necessary repairs before installing them on the tree.

Do not leave tree lights or other electrical decorations turned on when no one is in the house.

Be sure to dispose of wrappings from gifts promptly.

Make sure your tree is fresh cut and keep it outside until you are ready to install it. Saw off the trunk diagonally one inch or more about the cut end. Stand the tree in water and maintain the water level above the cut end during the time you have the tree in the house.

Keep your tree away from any source of heat to prevent rapid drying and remove the tree as soon after Christmas Day as possible.

Return January 3

D. C. Schools Quit Friday For Holiday

All public and parochial school children in the Greater Washington Area except those attending public schools in Montgomery County will begin their Christmas holiday at the end of the school day Thursday.

The Montgomery students will report for a half day on Friday.

District, Montgomery, Prince Georges, Fairfax, Falls Church, Arlington and Alexandria public schools will resume January 3, as will the parochial schools in the Roman Catholic Archdiocese of Washington.

George Washington University will close down after classes Wednesday and will reopen January 3.

Students at Catholic University will have a longer holiday. Final classes will be held Wednesday and they will not resume until January 5.

American University students were excused yesterday (Saturday) but they will return January 2.

Georgetown will shut down for the holidays after classes Tuesday and students will return January 3.

Maryland and Howard University will follow the same schedule as Georgetown.

Elected Textile Fellow

Truman to Light White House Tree From Missouri Saturday

President Truman will push a button from his Independence, Mo. home at about 5:15 p. m. December 24 and the National Community Christmas Tree here will light up—marking the twenty-seventh annual tree lighting ceremony on the White House lawn.

As usual, thousands of Washington residents and visitors will start their holiday celebration by attending the presidential Yuletide salute. It will take place on the south lawn of the White House grounds. The southeast gate to the Executive Mansion will be opened to the public at 3:30 p. m. Saturday.

After Mr. Truman lights the tree by remote control he will deliver his Christmas greetings to the Nation. The President's talk and the entire program will be broadcast over the major networks, and millions across the country, will watch the ceremony on television sets.

Details of the traditional event were disclosed yesterday by the committee in charge of the tree-lighting arrangements.

Mr. Truman will speak to Washington from Missouri and a District Boy Scout and Girl Scout will return the Capital's greetings to the President and Mrs. Truman.

The program, as in previous years, will open at 4:30 p. m. with a half-hour concert by the United States Marine Band, directed by Maj. William F. Santelmann.

Oscar L. Chapman, Secretary of Interior, will reside as national chairman of the Christmas tree committee.

Lights this year for the Nation's No. 1 Christmas tree are constructed, a committee spokesman said, "so as to give the halo-like glow of burning candles in the distance."

The National Community Tree is sponsored jointly by the District Recreation Board, National Capital Parks, the Electric Institute of Washington, the American Forestry Association and the Greater National Capital Committee.

The tree will be a "singing tree" from Christmas Eve through January 2, with carols being broadcast from its base every evening from 5 to 10 p. m.

Trade Board Yule Broadcast Set for Today

Children from 50 nations will gather in native costume today to send holiday greetings to the children of their homelands.

The occasion is the 15th annual international children's Christmas brodcast, sponsored by the Greater National Capital Committee of the Washington Board of Trade and the National Broadcasting Co., to be held from 4 to 4:30 p. m. in the Continental Room of the Wardman Park Hotel.

This year for the first time, the Colorful affair will be televised as well as broadcast. Radio listeners will hear a rebroadcast over WRC on 1:30 p. m., Monday while TV viewers will get a direct picture over WNBW at 4 p. m. today.

The Florists Telegraph Delivery Association will send flowers to persons designated by the children in each of the countries

Labert St. Clair Dies; Author, Journalist

Labert St. Clair, 62, journalist, publicist and author, died unexpectedly of a heart attack yesterday afternoon when horseback riding near Vienna, Va.

Mr. St. Clair

He was seen to dismount and collapse. By the time friends reached his side, he was dead. Associates said he had not complained of ill health. He lived at 2633 15th st. nw.

Since 1937 St. Clair ran the St. Clair Service, business counselors, in the Hibbs Building, 725 15th st. nw. A veteran newspaperman, he headed the House of Representatives staff of the Associated Press for about eight years prior to World War I. He later wrote a syndicated column, was author of several books and numerous magazine articles, as well as being an authority on horses.

Friends quoted St. Clair as saying he could die a happy man on horseback. He also had a race horse named after him.

Wife, Two Daughters Survive

Surviving are his wife, the former Mae G. Dirks; two daughters, Mrs. Richard West of Decatur, Ill., and Mrs. Jerome Hardy of New York City; a brother, Gordon St. Clair of Chicago, and a sister, Mrs. George Neikirt of Veedersburg, Ind.

During the 1946 congressional campaign, St. Clair gained reputation as a forecaster when, after covering more than 20,000 miles in 30 States, he predicted the election result within one seat in the House and three seats in the Senate.

A native of Veedersburg, Ind., his first occupation was that of buggy painter, in 1903. At 17, he became a county correspondent for the Danville (Ill.) Democrat, later one of its reporters.

His first big break came covering the trial following the Iroquois Theater fire in Chicago when the change in venue sent it to Danville. His brilliant coverage got him a job on the Chicago Interocean for two years. He then joined the AP in Chicago, later serving as head of the Albany, N. Y., bureau. Transferred to Washington, he headed the House staff from 1909 to 1917.

During World War I he handled publicity for the Liberty Loan, coining such well-known phrases as "Halt the Hun." Following the war, he wrote a syndicated column, "Folks And Things About Washington," and from 1921-37 was with the Barron G. Collier advertising interests in New York. He helped organize publicity bureaus for NRA and the Federal Housing Administration here in 1933, and was assistant to Secretary of Commerce Roper 1933-37, after which he opened his business here.

A member of the National Press Club for 30 years, he was also a former vice-president.

Funeral arrangements have not been completed.

John M. Hutton

John M. Hutton, 59, World War I veteran of 2300 18th st. nw., died yesterday at the Bethesda Naval Medical Center.

Born in Framingham, Mass., he had lived here the past 13 years.

Mr. Hutton leaves his wife, Mrs. Mildred L. Hutton; a son, Vincent E. and a daughter, Mrs. Margaret L. Weathersbee, all of Washington.

Services will be held at Fort Myer Chapel at 11 a. m. Wednesday with burial in Arlington Cemetery.

In Memoriam

A booklet of 101 "In Memoriam" tributes suitable for publication is now available without charge. Remembrances for all members of the family and for friends are included. The booklet may be obtained at the front counter in the Post building, by telephoning your request, or by writing to the Washington Post Classified Advertising Department, Washington 4, D. C.

J. S. Collins, Newsman, Dead at 56

James Sullivan Collins, 56, a former deputy administrator of the War Assets Administration and a veteran newspaperman and Government information officer, died yesterday at Bethesda Naval Hospital after a long illness.

Mr. Collins

Mr. Collins, who lived at the Claridge Hotel, 820 Connecticut ave. nw., was deputy administrator of WAA in charge of information and advertising from the time the agency was established in 1945 until last month, when its liquidation was being completed.

Before he joined the WAA, he served as chief press officer for the War Manpower Commission. Early in World War II, he resigned as night news editor of the New York World Telegram and was commissioned as a major, being assigned to the War Department's bureau of public relations.

Mr. Collins rose to the rank of colonel and to the position of executive officer of the War Department bureau.

He was also a veteran of World War I.

Mr. Collins' newspaper posts included that of day city editor of the old New York World, where he also wrote a sports column and was assistant Sunday editor.

Previously, he had been employed by the New York Evening Mail, the Philadelphia Public Ledger, the Boston American, the Boston Post and the Boston Advertiser. He was managing editor of the Boston Advertiser for one year.

A native of Bellows Falls, Vt., he attended Syracuse University, where he studied economics and law. He began his newspaper career as a reporter on the Rutland (Vt.) Herald.

Funeral services and burial will be private.

He is survived by his wife, the former Miss Mary Lynch; a brother, Dr. John N. Collins of Malden, Mass., and two nephews, the Rev. John Collins of Newark, N. J., and Martin Collins of New York.

'Mother' Steed, Soldiers' Friend Through Two Wars, Dead at 85

The voice of "Mother" Steed, which was ever ready to cheer a serviceman or a veteran, was stilled yesterday.

Mrs. Emma C. Steed was her name. But to hundreds of thousands of men in two wars she was "Mom" or "Mother" Steed.

She died yesterday aout 1 p. m. at her home, 5321 Fairfax dr., Arlington. She was 85 and totally blind.

Her only immediate survivor is J. Nathaniel Steed, her husband, a former chief clerk of the Adjutant General's Office.

By dedicating her life to being a mother, a friend and a confidant to the men in uniform, "Mother" Steed carried on a family tradition of soldiering begun by her great-great-grandfather in 1737.

First to Enlist

She was a fifth generation Washingtonian and the great-granddaughter of Leonard Cokendosser, the first man in Georgetown County to enlist in the Revolutionary War.

At the end of the Eighteenth century Cokendosser owned and operated the stage coach line between Baltimore and Washington.

"Mother" Steed's great-grandmother and later her grandmother were among the first students to attend Georgetown College.

"Mother" Steed was a friend to the soldiers in the first World War. And it was their sons she took to her heart when World War II shook the earth.

She was 52 when World War I came along. She wanted to go overseas. She was too old, far past the age limit, she was told.

Ran Red Cross Canteen

But determination won and "Mother" Steed went to France in 1918 to head the Red Cross canteen at Dijon, France. In France she lost the sight of one eye.

Before World War I, "Mother" Steed had for 18 years been secretary of the Episcopal Home for Children.

After the Armistice, her interest in the men in uniform did not flag. She established and ran canteens for the veteran on C st. nw., and in Georgetown.

She also organized the Arlington County Chapter of the Red Cross.

Helped Hungry Veterans

When the depression of the early 30s fell and an army of rugged, hungry veterans moved on Washington to demand a bonus it was

In total darkness . . .

"Mother" Steed who threw all her energy into the battle to see they were fed, clothed and housed.

As service chairman of the Washington Women's Overseas Service League she persuaded the Government to provide quarters for the veterans. This became the War Veterans Home, at 2626 Pennsylvania ave. nw, which operated until 1936. In its four years the home sheltered and fed 11,000 veterans.

Although 77 when the Japs struck at Pearl Harbor, within two months "Mother" Steed was devoting 12 hours a day to "her boys" as head hostess at Servicemen's Club No. 1, 9th st. and Pennsylvania ave. nw.

Struck During Ball Game

Her total blindness began in September, 1946, when she was struck in her good eye by a foul ball while attending a servicemen's soft ball game in Rock Creek Park. Sight gradually dimmed.

In January, 1947, she received the Civilian Meritorious Service Award in special ceremonies at Walter Reed Hospital.

To the end "Mother" Steed's "boys" remembered her with telephone calls and messages from all parts of the world.

John Brewster Dies on Train

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (AP).—John Brewster, 62-year-old finance officer of the U. S. Bureau of Mines, died of a heart attack early today on a train between York, Pa., and Baltimore.

His companion on the trip, Miss Irene Smolder, said Brewster was en route to Baltimore to consult heart specialists. He was released a few days ago from a hospital in Pittsburgh, where was under treatment for a heart ailment.

He was stricken on the train from Pittsburgh to Baltimore. An ambulance was waiting when the train arrived here, but Brewster was pronounced dead on arrival at St. Joseph's Hospital.

Brewster's home was in New York City.

Mrs. Rose E. Allen

Mrs. Rose Elizabeth Allen, 46 of 1819 North Van Buren st., Falls Church, was pronounced dead on arrival at Arlington Hospital Friday following a heart attack at her home.

Mrs. Allen was born in Loudoun County, Va., and attended schools there. She spent her adult life in Arlington and Fairfax Counties.

She was a member of the Crossman Methodist Church, Falls Church, and of the Ballston (Va.) Council, Daughters of America.

Funeral services will be held at the Crossman Methodist Church Monday at 2:30 p. m. Burial will be Oakwood Cemetery, Falls Church.

Besides her husband, Amos R. Allen, she leaves ten stepchildren.

David S. Smith

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 17 (AP).—David Stanley Smith, 73, retired dean of Yale's Music School, died today at his home after an illness of several months.

John Weaver Rites Monday; Local Realtor

Services for John L. Weaver, 84, prominent Washington realtor, who died here early yesterday, will be held at Gawler's Funeral Home, 1756 Pennsylvania ave., nw, at 2 p.m. Monday. Burial will be private.

Mr. Weaver was the retired president of Weaver Bros. Inc., a local real estate firm, and was the oldest living member of the Washington Board of Trade.

He died after a short illness at his home, 4 West Woodbine st., Chevy Chase, Md.

Mr. Weaver retired 14 years ago after a half century in the Washington real estate business. He was a past president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards and a past president of the Washington Real Estate Board.

In addition, he was one of the founders of the Rotary Club here and was a member of the Temple Noyes Masonic Lodge No. 32. During the first World War he was District fuel administrator.

A native Washingtonian, Mr. Weaver was a graduate of Columbian University, now George Washington University.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annie L. Weaver; two daughters, Mrs. James M. Burns of Chevy Chase and Mrs. H. Clay Thompson of Grayton, Md; two sons, Charles B. Weaver, Chevy Chase, and Frank L. Weaver, New Concord, Ohio.

Mr. Weaver also leaves two brothers, Charles H. and George and a sister, Mrs. Sue Weaver Merriam, all of Washington.

Warren Tolson Rites Tuesday; Hotel Owner

Funeral services for Warren Tolson, 73, resort hotel owner who died Friday of a cerebral hemhorrage, will be held Tuesday noon at St. George's Episcopal Church in Valley Lee, Md. Burial will be in the church cemetery.

Mr. Tolson, who lived at 2319 High st., se., owned the Piney Point Hotel, a family summer resort, on the Potomac River in St. Mary's County, Md. He operated it from 1915 until the last war when it was converted to apartment use for personnel at the Petuxtent Naval Base.

Presidents Theodore and Franklin Roosevelt both visited the resort from their yachts anchored off Piney Point, relatives said.

A native of Washington, Mr. Tolson was the son of the late Julius W. Tolson, mayor and postmaster of Anacostia.

Mr. Tolson was the oldest living past master of the Anacostia Masonic Lodge.

He is survived by his wife, Mrs. Annie Simpson Tolson, to whom he had been married for 51 years; a son, Julius of the High st. address; and two daughters, Mrs. Ann Wentz, 1811 23rd st., se., and Mrs. Jean Walkart, 1823 T pl., se.

Federal Scholarship Plan to Be Urged

By The Associated Press

The American Council on Education will urge Congress this week to set up a Federal program of college scholarships.

The council—composed of educational associations, colleges, universities and school districts—will recommend in its journal Monday that such legislation be introduced when Congress reconvenes next month.

Dr. Francis J. Brown, staff associate of the council, said it will insist scholarships be awarded solely on the basis of financial need.

Earl James McGrath, United States Commissioner of Education, has proposed that Congress provide 300 million dollars a year for: (1) Scholarships of $600 a year to 400,000 young men and women of outstanding ability; and (2) fellowships of $1000 a year to 37,000 graduate students.

Brown said the council in its emphasis on the need principle differs sharply from the McGrath plan.

"That plan says nothing about need and implies that a student of outstanding ability could get a scholarship even though he would be able to go through college without it," Brown said. "That system would be acceptable if we had an unlimited program with a blank check like the GI bill."

Student Plan, School Buses To Be Studied

The Arlington School Board yesterday set January 11 as the date for public hearing on the questions of school buses for county youngsters and the proposed sw tch from the semester system to annual promotion for students.

Place of the hearing has not been announced.

The annual promotion plan would provide that six-year-olds be admitted to school only once a year—in the fall—thus simplifying school planning and administrative work. The proposed change would not affect youngsters entering this February.

The system now does not operate school buses, but children in some areas are transported for a 5-cent fare on a franchise basis with the Arnold Bus Lines.

The school board yesterday awarded $37,284 worth of bids on furniture for six new school units to be completed this year. Contracts went to:

A. D. Whitney Co. of Richmond, $11,872 for 800 chairs and desks; Hale Co. of East Arlington, Vt., $15,500 for 1000 tables and chairs, and the Flower School Equipment Co. of Richmond, $9,912 for 700 desks and chairs.

Adventists Honor Dr. H. G. Hadley At Testimonial

Dr. Henry G. Hadley, of 1252 6th st., sw., was honored last night for his "extensive humanitarian work," at a testimonial dinner at the Prince Georges Medical Center, 42nd pl. at Rhode Island ave., Hyattsville.

The affair, given by the Pennsylvania Avenue Seventh Day Adventist Church, was attended by 150 persons including widows, widowers, elderly and infirm persons who have been directly or indirectly assisted by Dr. Hadley, director of the Washington Sanitarium Mission Clinic, 6th and N sts., sw.

Among several "Christmas gifts" presented at the dinner was a much-needed appendectomy for a young Clinton, Md., girl, the daughter of a widow.

The doctor was praised by Elder J. Lee Neil, pastor of the Pennsylvania Avenue church, master of ceremonies, for his "outstanding and unusual service to the underprivileged sick and infirm people of the Greater Washington area."

4 Percent Rent Raise Granted At Ambassador

A 4 percent increase in the rents of 62 apartments in the Ambassador, 1750 16th st. nw., was recommended yesterday by District Rent Examiner William T. Kane.

The owner, represented by Herman Miller, requested a 9.5 percent increase, which was opposed by a group of tenants represented by Douglas A. Clark, attorney.

Proposed rents would range from $31.20 a month for one room and bath to $67.60 for three rooms and bath. Present rates are from $30 to $65 a month.

Arbiters Resume Talks Today in Transit Dispute

Executive sessions of the five-man arbitration board preparing an award in a dispute between the Capital Transit Co. and its union employes continued all day yesterday at the Statler Hotel and are scheduled again today.

Board Chairman Alfred A. Colby said last night that no final decisions have been reached.

The workers have asked for a 25-cent an hour wage increase and improvements in working conditions.

Students' Bodies Found In Weckage of Plane

Redding, Calif., Dec. 17 (AP).—The mangled bodies of two Washington State College students were found today amid the scattered wreckage of their plane.

The demolished converted BT-13 trainer smashed to bits in the lava rocks north of Glenburn yesterday as the pair flew home for the holidays. They were identified as: Tommy Dye, 24, Clearwater, Calif., owner of the plane, and Robert W. Finch, 22, Phoenix, Aiz.

New York Water Still Dwindling Despite Savings

New York, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—City officials looked with satisfaction today on a 30 percent water saving on "bathless Friday" but warned that unless voluntary reductions are continued it may lead to such drastic steps as reducing manufacture of beer and soda pop.

Official figures showed that New York consumed 798 million gallons of water on yesterday's "vacation" compared with the basic average of 1,147,000,000 gallons a day before conservation measures were begun—a saving of 349 million gallons.

City Water Commissioner Stephen J. Carney lauded the effort but appealed to New Yorkers not to let up on saving water lest it lead to rationing and restrictive measures. Chief Engineer Edward J. Clark of the water department revealed that the city's reservoirs, already only a third of normal, dropped 95 million gallons yesterday despite a day of no shaves, no baths and emergency use of water only.

Army Map Unit To Donate Blood In Montgomery

Employes of the Army Map Service will donate blood when the Red Cross Bloodmobile visits Montgomery County on Wednesday, December 21. Hours are 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Other Bloodmobile visits for the week are as follows:

During the past week, a total of 479 pints of blood were distributed to hospitals within the District and in nearby States served by the Bloodmobile. This included 286 to hospitals in the District, 74 to Maryland, 105 to Virginia and 8 to West Virginia.

Holdup Sentence For Youth, 18, Is Suspended

An 18-year-old youth yesterday was given a 2-to-8 year suspended sentence in District Court and put on probation for five years on a robbery charge.

He is Vance C. Nessly of 518 Missouri ave. nw., the son of William V. Nessly of the staff of The Washington Post.

Young Nessly and a juvenile companion were arrested last June following the holdup of a High's Ice Cream store at 1732 Trinidad ave. ne. A total of $9 was taken in the holdup.

Chief Judge Bolitha J. Laws told the youth: "Your case has given me as much worry as I ever had . . ." The jurist said that he decided to give the boy "another chance," after "exhaustive investigation."

Maryland Park Unit Denies 3 Bids for Commercial Zoning

The Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission yesterday recommended denial of three applications for commercial zoning.

In all cases the commission based its recommendation on the premise that additional commercial property is not needed in the locality.

The petitions were filed by:

Norbeck Properties, Inc., for 1½ acres near the intersection of Georgia ave. extended and Route 28 at Olney.

James Dove, for .356 acres on the east side of Seven Locks rd., 1½ miles north of Bradley blvd.

Norman H. and Blanche E. Mihell, for ½ acre on the southeast side of Columbia pike in Burtonsville.

The recommendations, all in line with opinions rendered by the commission's technical staff, were forwarded to the Montgomery County Council, which has final action on zoning applications.

Equal School Facilities Suit Filed in Florida

Tampa, Fla., Dec. 17 (AP).—A suit for equal education facilities for Negroes, similar to one that is costing Virginia millions of dollars, has been filed in Federal court here.

Thirteen Negro adults and their 28 children filed the action yesterday against the Hillsborough County school board, County School Superintendent Crockett Farnell and District 1 (Tampa) school trustees.

They ask a permanent injunction against inequalities in school instruction and facilities, a decree declaring that school policy here violates the United States and Florida Constitutions, and $100,000 damages because of alleged unsatisfactory conditions.

Specifically the plaintiffs ask for the same courses provided for white children, equal transportation, equal kindergarten facilities and an end to double sessions.

They charged that Negro children do not have the space or facilities for many courses white children get, do not have the same athletic opportunities, have no kindergarten schools, use dilapidated buses white schools have discarded, have inferior buildings, and many more double sessions.

Double sessions, putting the children on the streets for longer hours, encourage delinquency, the suit stated. The suit followed a warning from Negro civic leaders three months ago.

Preference Rating Backed for Cadets In Service Exams

District school officials have indorsed a proposal to give high school cadets a preference rating in local competitive examinations for nomination to West Point and Annapolis.

In a letter to the Commissioners, Superintendent Hobart M. Corning said it was felt the suggested 5 or 10-point handicap would stimulate interest in the appointments and "enhance the status of the cadets."

Disappointed by the dearth of applications for available appointments from the District, the Commissioners 10 days ago had sought school opinion on the preference rating plan as a means of attracting more candidates. The plan could be put into effect with approval by the Commissioners.

ADA Urges Rights Showdown

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (AP).—The national board of Americans for Democratic Action today called for an early showdown on civil rights in Congress.

In a statement issued at a meeting here, the board urged that fair employment practices bills be called up for action as soon as Congress reconvenes "so the people will know where their representatives stand on this and other matters which will shape the 1950 issues."

"In judging the records of our national legislators," the statement said, "we cannot but regard silence or equivocation on this issue as a vote against it."

The ADA said "the blame for the killing of the civil rights program to date rests equally upon the Republican Party and a substantial number of Democrats."

Much of the responsibility for pushing the bill in Congress, the statement added, "will rest upon Senator Scott W. Lucas, whom we urge to act now in order to obtain approval of this program." Lucas (D., Ill.) is Senate majority leader.

Arlington Apartment Project Urged for Commercial Use

Continuing opposition to the proposed Arlington Towers apartments, on the Virginia side of Memorial Bridge at Lee and Wilson blvds., was voiced yesterday by the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

In a letter to A. T. Lundberg, Arlington County manager, the commission urged commercial development of the area, with a shopping center or fringe parking facilities rather than the proposed apartment.

Sponsors of the proposed structure, it was learned last night, have offered to the NCPPC that they will change the type of structure and reduce it to eight stories instead of the proposed 11 stories and penthouses. But in the letter yesterday, the NCPPC, without mentioning the offer, maintained its objection.

"There is some feeling among members of the commission," the letter to Lundberg said, "that it would be better for all concerned if the property on which the apartment is proposed to be built, except for immediate frontage on Lee blvd., on the axis of Constitution ave., were developed in accordance with (Arlington) zoning plans, i. e., commercial and industrial uses, such as a terminal or fringe parking and shopping center, which would help to reduce the amount of travel over the Arlington Memorial and Lee bridges.

"Such a plan would give employment to Arlington County and enhance the tax base more in proportion to liabilities than would a 2000-unit apartment project."

The letter was signed by A. E. Demaray, vice chairman and acting executive officer of the NCPPC.

The original plans for the apartment, eseimated to cost about 20 million dollars, call for 2000 units in three and later four, tower-like structures, containing about 1750 units.

Sponsor is the O'Driscoll Construction Co., of New York and Washington. Officials of the company were not available for comment last night. Lawrence W. Douglas, Arlington attorney from the firm, said he is certain that they will make any reasonable economic adjustment in plans that would please the NCPPC.

Bladensburg Yule Program

Alexandria Charter Reflects History

By Robert P. Jordan
Post Reporter

About the time that Alexandria reached its 200th birthday last year, the city fathers came to the conclusion that the charter under which they operated was stiff as a board—or a headstone.

That was in September of last year. Alexandria now is in its third century of life. And the city council is studying a proposed charter aimed at keeping the city growing, without the growing pains.

This proposed basic law of the city, delivered Tuesday by the council appointed Alexandria Charter Commission after six months' consideration, hits at the heart of one of the city's worst administrative problems:

The idea that councilmen are assistant city managers. Or, the refusal by past councils to let the city manager do his job without butting in.

Defines Relationship

On the premise that the city manager's authority must equal his responsibility, the proposed charter clearly defines for the first time his relationship to the city council. It says, in effect, that council must deal with operating departments of the city through him—not around him.

It backs this policy up. Any councilman who interferes in the hiring or firing of a city employe, or tries to direct him, is guilty of a misdemeanor. Conviction results in removal from the council.

The proposed charter calls for a clean sweep in another vexing municipal problem—finances.

Until a short time ago, the city's fiscal problems were handled by the finance committee of city council. Even now, according to the charter commission's report, the "basic financial defects come from the mistaken belief that financial management and general management are two separate processes."

The city manager prepares the budget, but nothing in the current charter insures he will follow good financial practice, the commission says.

Creates Finance Department

Budgeting and accounting, the commission asserts, are the most important aspects of management. So it has proposed that a department of finance, under the city manager, be set up, as well as an auditor of municipal accounts.

The other principal provisions of the proposed charter are:

1. Election of the city council on a nonpartisan basis.

Because the commission felt this to be its most controversial proposal, it asked the council to provide for an advisory referendum at the November 8 general election. Citizens approved nonpartisan election of council by a 3-to-1 vote.

Council Selects Mayor

2. Selection of the mayor by the council, instead of having the post go to the candidate for council who obtained the most votes, as at present.

3. Appointment of the city attorney—not election. He "must have a confidential and professional relation with the city council . . . such a relation is most likely to be satisfactory if the city attorney is not elected independently," the charter said.

4. Extension of the city planning commission's duties to include revision of the city zoning map at least every two years; preparation of an annual "capital budget plan," setting forth needed expansion in public facilities; and hiring of a planning director and staff.

5. Creation of "a real system of personnel administration" based on "equal pay for equal work" as well as preparation by the city manager of a personnel classification and systematic pay plan.

6. Abolition of the elective office of city collector, and the transfer of tax collecting to the finance department. The commission cited the "ever present danger that for reasons of offending the electorate (who pay the taxes) the collection of taxes . . . might not be rigidly enforced."

George Had No Idea

Two hundred years ago, Alexandria's favorite son—George Washington — likely had little idea when he helped stake out the tiny town that some 70,000 persons would live there in 1949. But, though not yet in his twenties, he unquestionably knew that when one man says "you ought to do it this way," another may well reply "I disagree."

Though the proposed charter is but a few days old, the issues already begin to take shape.

Councilman Leroy S. Bendheim, in a "curbstone opinion," struck at the statute which would remove a council member from office for interfering in the hiring, firing or direction of city employes. "Utterly ridiculous," he said.

MacArthur Citizens Unit To Light Tree

Free Showing Of 'Messiah' Set Monday, Tuesday

A free performance of "The Messiah," will be given at Lisner Auditorium of George Washington University, at 8:30 p. m., Monday and Tuesday, by the Air Force Symphony Orchestra and accompanying singers.

The vocalists are drawn from the "Singing Sergeants," George Washington University Glee Club, Eldbrooke Methodist Church choir, and members of the choirs of Foundry Methodist Church and New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

Warrant Officer Robert L. Landers, former assistant conductor of the San Carlo Opera Company, will direct the performance and soloists will be Judith Callender, Rilla Rowe Mervine, T/Sergt. Ivah Genuchi, and M/Sergt. Glenn Darwin.

Young Asks Safety In Traffic Here During Holidays

Commissioner John Russell Young yesterday called on District residents to cooperate in a Nationwide program to hold down traffic accidents during the Christmas season.

"Needless and preventable accidents . . . make a hollow mockery of the Yuletide spirit," said Young. "Let's all remember this and make it a personal responsibility to keep our city's holiday celebration the safest on record."

The Federation of Businessmen's Association has distributed 5000 posters bearing the holiday slogan of the Commissioners' Traffic Advisory Board: "Give yourself the best Christmas present of all, an accident-free holiday."

Bulk of Estate Left to Widow By Berryman

The bulk of the estate of Clifford K. Berryman, Evening Star cartoonist who died December 11, will go to his widow, Mrs. Kate D. Berryman, according to the terms of Berryman's will filed in District Court yesterday.

The estate, the value of which will not be revealed until a petition for probate is filed, is to be placed in trust for Mrs. Berryman.

Named as trustees are a son, James T. Berryman, and a daughter, Miss Florence St. Berryman.

The will was dated December 22, Mrs. Berryman's death the trust shall end and the estate be divided 2-3 to Miss Berryman and 1-3 to the son because, the will said, the later "is in a better position to earn his livelihood."

The will was dater December 22, 1948 and Berryman's signature was followed by a head sketch of his famed teddy bear.

Miss Berryman and James T. Berryman were named as executors of the estate as well as trustees of the trust fund.

Tax Boost Not Needed, Dugan Says

Arlington County Board Member Daniel Dugan does not believe an increase in county taxes will be necessary for the coming fiscal year, he said yesterday.

Dugan thinks the steady increase in county building this year has created enough taxable property to tide Arlington through the 1950-51 fiscal year, revenue-wise. By the 1951 fiscal year, these factors will contribute to a sizable increase in county revenue:

(1) A scheduled 1950 reassessment of county property, which should "equalize" assessments and raise property tax revenue.

(2) The 1950 national census, on the basis of which distribution of some State revenues will be revised. Arlington, which has an estimated 125,000 population, has been getting State funds on the basis of its 1940 population of 57,000.

(3) The possible passage of Federal legislation granting payments in lieu of taxes to areas in which the Government has sizable tax-free holdings.

Miss Truman to Make Radio Debut Tuesday

By the United Press

If President Truman turns on his radio Tuesday night he can hear his favorite soprano singing everybody's favorite Christmas carols.

The President's daughter Margaret will make her first professional radio appearance that evening as guest soloist on the American Broadcasting Co.'s "Carnegie Hall" program at 8 p. m. (E. S. T.).

Miss Truman will sing "Silent Night," "O Little Town of Bethlehem," and the "O Mio Babbino Caro" aria from Puccini's comic opera, "Gianni Schicci."

Vote Machine Rental at $9700 To Be Studied in Arlington

The Arlington County Board yesterday appointed a three-man committee to investigate the use of voting machines in the county.

In addition, it set January 14 as a public hearing date on a proposed ordinance to license barbers and stiffen the sanitary requirements for barber shops.

At present the county's 65 barbers are subject only to health department rules, which have "no teeth," according to Frank Morgan, representing the Arlington Barbers Association, which drew up the ordinance.

Investigation of voting machines was initiated after Electoral Board Secretary Bankhead T. Davies told the County Board that total price of the 65 machines would be $71,825.

They could be rented, however, at a cost of $9700 for a year's trial run, with the rent applied to the purchase price, Davies said. He added that the electoral board has a $5000 surplus in its funds, which could be used for part of the rental.

Members of the committee are Davies, County Manager A. T. Lundberg and County Board Member F. Freeland Chew.

In other actions yesterday, the County Board:

1. Approved a candy, tobacco and soft drink stand, to be operated in the County Courthouse main corridor by the Virginia Commission for the Blind.

2. Received the resignation of Elmer F. Newell, County Director of Finance for the past 17 years, "with regret." Newell, whose resignation is effective January 15, 1950, will become secretary-manager of the Southwest Montana Development Association in Anaconda, Mont.

3. Unanimously approved payment of a $1606 bill for services rendered by Lester Conley, attorney who represented the board during the recent Arnold Lines fare increase hearing before the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Board member Daniel Dugan, who opposed Conley's appointment to the job as "political" before the recent election, stated he was approving payment in spite of the fact "that I once said I didn't feel I could vote to pay him (because) Mr. Conley has done a very good job."

4. Referred to the County Manager for study, requests for sidewalks adjoining the following schools: Walter Reed, Charles S. Stewart, Kate Waller Barrett, Nellie Custis and Dolly Madison.

Tobin Appointed to Direct Brotherhood Week Activities

Secretary of Labor Maurice J. Tobin will head the District observance of Brotherhood Week in February, it was announced by the National Conference of Christians and Jews, sponsors of the annual observance.

Tobin

Purpose of Brotherhood Week from February 19 through 26, is to promote the ideal of brotherhood and to make respect for the individual a part of the normal activities of all people, according to Mrs. Verna D. Linzel, executive secretary of the Washington NCCJ office.

In accepting the local chairmanship, Secretary Tobin said he recognized the importance of Brotherhood Week in setting the pattern for the year-round program of the NCCJ.

"It is not a job for one week in the year," said Tobin, "but rather for every one of the 52 weeks of every year. I bespeak the wholehearted cooperation of my fellow residents of the District of Columbia."

Secretary Tobin said he would appoint a committee and meet with them to plan the programs for the week's observance. He will serve under the national chairmanship of John L. Sullivan, former Secretary of the Navy.

The NCCJ's avowed purpose is to fight bigotry, discrimination and intolerance "as diseases which seriously threaten the health of the Nation, menace its democratic institutions and weigh oppressively upon large sections of the population."

Pantomime Cantata Set

A Christmas cantata in pantomime will be presented by students of Miner Teachers College today at 4 p. m. in the school auditorium, Georgia ave. and Euclid st. nw. The community is invited to the program directed by Dr. Paul Cooke and Mrs. Vivian McBrier of the college faculty.

Anzac Labor Upsets Might Even Be Felt in U. S.

By Ferdinand Kuhn
Post Reporter

BY BOOTING two Labor governments out of office, New Zealand and Australia have just given socialism a kick heard round the world.

In New Zealand, the voters rejected Peter Fraser's old and tired Labor government after 14 years of power. In Australia, they got rid of Joseph B. Chifley's Labor government after eight years.

The new regimes have different party labels—the National Party in New Zealand, the Liberal and Country Parties in Australia—but they might just as well call themselves "Anti-Socialist," for that is what they are.

The results of these elections have brought hope and joy to conservatives in many countries, especially in Britain, where the Labor government faces an early fight for its life at the polls.

It does not matter to the rejoicers that both New Zealand and Australia are firmly committed to the welfare state, whichever party is in power. The fact is that two advanced and progressive democracies have decided to slow the pace of reform and the growth of government powers.

They have put a stop-light on the road to the further nationalization of industries and public services. To those who hate government controls, this is enough.

Cartoonists' Field Day

IT IS a long time since conservatives in the English-speaking countries have had anything to cheer about. Now they think they have it, and in England, at least, they are making more than the most of it.

Tory cartoonists and editorial writers are having a field day picturing the dominion elections as the handwriting on the wall for British Labor. They are telling the harassed middle-class millions that a tide is stirring at last against the all-powerful state and back to old-time independence, initiative and enterprise.

"See what your kinsmen have done to deliver themselves from evil," they are telling the British voters. "Why not do the same when your turn comes?" The Australian election slogan, "Socialism Leads to Communism," now commends itself to many British Tories as a winning proposition.

And there are echoes in England of the passionate election appeal of A. W. Fadden, champion of the Australian farmers and grazers, leader of the Country Party which now forms part of the triumphant anti-Socialist coalition.

"If you choose the Labor Party," said Fadden, "then your ballot paper will truly be your last will and testament, disposing in your own lifetime of your liberties and your property, and condemning your children and your children's children to the living death of Socialist regimentation."

This is strong stuff, or stuff-and-nonsense, whichever you choose. But it worked in Australia this year, and it may work again among the middle-class voters who put Labor into power in England at the end of the war.

They Swing Together

IT IS an odd fact of the last 25 years that the swings of the political pendulum in Australia have coincided in uncanny fashion with the swings in England. Sometimes Australia has been a few months ahead, sometimes a few months behind, but the two countries have rarely elected governments of opposite beliefs.

In 1924, for example, the voters of both countries put anti-Socialist governments in power with big majorities. In 1928 and 1929, both voted Labor back into office. When the depression struck them, both countries formed conservative coalitions, and throughout the thirties kept antisocialism firmly in the saddle.

Australia tossed out its anti-Socialists in 1943; Britain did not get around to it until 1945. But if the British had not had the German army at their very doorstep, and had held their own election in 1943, the result might well have been the same.

Whether or not the British follow the Australian example once more, the coincidences in the record are at least striking. These two peoples, separated by 10,000 miles, voting on different local issues, nevertheless have responded in the same way and at almost the same time, and may do so again.

One thing is sure: that if the British, too, overthrow their Labor government, the result should hearten and strengthen the Republicans in our own congressional elections in 1950. Senator Robert A. Taft and others of his party will be encouraged to attack what they now call the "Handout State" if they see attacks on it succeeding elsewhere.

The Australian and New Zealand elections, then, may turn out to be events of world-wide importance. They may have started the bandwagon rolling along the Right side of the road.

A Gentle Reputation

IF New Zealand had done the job alone, the psychological effect abroad would have been much less perceptible. For New Zealand is the most modest of democracies, including the Scandinavian. It does not trumpet its many virtues—except when

Berlin's Ruling Emotion Is Fear

By Frank Gervasi
Post Reporter

BERLIN.—You arrive remembering Berlin and the Berliners as they were 11 years ago, on the day of Hitler's triumphal return from the Munich Conference that was to have given us "Peace in our time." Zieg Heil!

Unter Den Linden dripped with banners and pennants. The September sun glinted on golden eagles perched on white standards all the way from the Brandenburg Gate to Koenigstrasse. Double rows of helmeted troops restrained the cheering, laughing crowds that ribboned the sidewalks. Zieg Heil!

A preposterous little man with outstretched, swastika-banded right arm rode briskly past. I can see him now — Der Fuehrer grinning smugly, standing in the rear of the big, open black car with the two swastikas on the front mudguards. Zieg Heil!

You arrive remembering London during the Blitz and smelling cordite and tasting mortar dust and hearing the crunch of bombs on homes, churches and factories. You come with a photomontage of sickening wartime memories and hating the people most responsible for them.

You stand with your back to the Brandenburg Gate and look up Unter Den Linden. You do not recognize what you see as having been a boulevard, nor what is around you as having been a city. Off to the right is the Chancellery, still exuding evil. That must have been the Adlon. That gnawed thing was the American Embassy.

Beyond the Adlon there is scaffolding. The Russians are building an enormous embassy there. You turn around and walk back through the Brandenburg Gate. That vast weedy emptiness edged with ruins was the tree-shaded Tiergarten. You recognize Wagner surveying in marble silence the Valkyrian scene. Some boys are hunting rabbits with ferrets.

For a few minutes you feel a sense of exultation. You hear yourself saying, "They sure got was coming to them," and then you fight a wave of nausea. Homes, churches and factories were smashed here, too. Men, women and children died here, too. Berlin is no longer a city, but a revolting rubble heap.

It takes a day or two to get over the feeling that the men and women whom you see in the mucky streets, hunched against the December rain and wet snow, are ghosts. Then slowly Berlin and its inhabitants come into focus.

In the Cafe Wein with its chandeliers, crowded tables, music and the smell of coffee, cakes and chocolate, you begin to rediscover the Germans. They are wearing their prewar clothes — shapeless coats, mangy furs and frayed ties. Before you know it, you find hate draining from you and giving way to something that is not affection, but is not merely pity, either.

Then you meet Germans and talk with them in stores, cafes, restaurants and in their homes, and on buses and in the subway and surface trains. You watch the younger set jitterbugging awkwardly in the Femina, sit through bizarre skits by pseudo intellectuals in the beerily Bohemian Badewanne and listen to political arguments in middle-class families.

You begin to recognize Germans as people and to feel a kinship with them you did not dream you would ever have when you got their blockbusters in London, heard their bombs scream in Tobruk, groveled to their 88s in the mudholes of Anzio and Cassino, or saw those furnaces at Dachau and Buchenwald.

There may be unregenerate Nazis here. I understand that there are many. But in a week of roving Berlin's ruins, I have met none, nor have I encountered Germans eager to have an army again or to fight anybody. I have met, instead, cold, confused,

Montgomery Schools Deserve U. S. Aid

(Second of a series.)

By Agnes E. Meyer
Post Reporter

KEEPING the public school system abreast of the population growth and the complex problems it creates, is a heavy educational, social and moral responsibility for the officials and citizens of Montgomery County. It is also a heavy financial strain upon the county's tax resources.

I studied with Mr. Richard E. Carpenter, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, the endless mass of completed homes around the Silver Spring area, between Viers Mill rd. and Georgia ave. extended, and on each side of these thoroughfares, in relation to the new elementary schools under construction. The volume and pace of the inmigration are almost frightening. At the end of every real estate development the bulldozers are mowing down the forest and leveling the rolling fields in preparation for more and yet more building. The question raises itself: Can any county, even wealthy Montgomery County, carry this load of school construction with which it is obviously faced for years to come? Can it afford, in addition, the quantity and quality of school personnel and the other civic and welfare services which will be needed to adjust thousands of heterogeneous families to the high cultural patterns of the older communities? To answer such questions with accuracy, a detailed study of the county's financial structure, the present cost of the educational system and the State aid it receives, must be weighed against the immediate as well as the long term financial responsibilities with which the county is faced.

Complicated Formula

ALTHOUGH the control and supervision of the public schools in Montgomery County lies with the County Board of Education, the general care and supervision of the free schools of Maryland is under the State Department of Education, of which Dr. Thomas G. Pullen is Superintendent. State aid to current costs of education for the counties of Maryland is a complicated but practical formula. It grants $20 per pupil enrolled, $400 per teacher as well as two-thirds of the minimum salary of supervisors and superintendents. In addition, it has an "equalization fund" which varies according to the assessed value of property in the county. This equalization fund makes for a more uniform standard among the counties. The participation of the State varies from 30 to 75 percent in the county and Baltimore City programs, according to income and the number of children in the counties. The State sets minimum wages for teachers from $2200 to $3800 per annum and a minimum year of nine months. If the counties pay the teachers more than the minimum, they shoulder the cost themselves as well as for all additional facilities such as kindergartens and for types of personnel which the State Board does not prescribe.

The total current operating budget of the public school system in Montgomery County for 1949-50 is $4,717,223, of which the State contributes $1,109,822 and the Federal Government, $15,000 for vocation aid. Thus the State now contributes about one-fourth of the counties' current costs for education. As the county spends about $200 per pupil, it receives roughly $50 of this from the State.

Top Bracket Inadequate

AS Montgomery County raised its teachers' salaries in 1947 to a minimum of $2500 and a proposed maximum of $4800, the county incurred an additional cost of one million dollars for the total salary increases of its teacher load. Even at that, the county council did not allow the proposed maximums which the board of education thinks necessary to hold the teachers who have the longest years of service and the highest qualifications. "If you expect to keep your best teachers, especially men with families to support," said Mr. John McIntyre, president of the Montgomery County P.-T.A., "they should be able to reach adequate top salaries considerably higher than we are now paying." In accord with the need for these salary increases are Mr. Herbert N. Eaton, president of the Montgomery County Civic Federation, and Mr. Russell I. Whyte, chairman of the schools committee of that organization. These gentlemen agreed that teachers with little experience are on a fair schedule. "But the living standards of our communities are high," they added, "and teachers with long experience and long years of service whom we must hold, are not being adequately recompensed."

Mr. E. M. Douglass, Assistant Superintendent of Schools, also pointed out that other Maryland counties, such as Baltimore, pay higher salaries, and without the promise of the proposed maximums Montgomery County will find it difficult to get the right kind of teachers in a tight and highly competitive market.

But the heaviest cost borne by the county for the past three years is the sharp rise in capital outlay for school construction. In 1945-46, the county spent $246,613 for new schools. In 1946-47, this item jumped to $1,049,633. Last year it nearly doubled, to $2,010,404. All these expenditures Montgomery County had to carry alone. This year, for the first time, the State Department of Education has come to the rescue of its hard pressed counties. The State Legislature appropriated 50 million dollars which could be loaned to the counties for school construction. This bill has now been declared invalid on a technicality which will be corrected as soon as possible. The State Legislature also appropriated 20 million dollars as an outright gift, if the counties themselves would appropriate three times as much as their share of the loan based on enrollment. Montgomery County's share of this loan is $1,260,540 and the county's contribution, $3,780,000. The county can borrow this sum from the State as soon as the bill authorizing loans for school construction becomes legal.

With this five-million-dollar fund the board of education is constructing six eight-room white elementary schools on sites adjacent to the largest new housing developments and three additions to old schools of 15 rooms in all. With luck, these will be completed in February. The school board disperses its elementary schools so

WORLD AFFAIRS

Most of China Grumbles, but Reds Push 'Reforms'

(Second of two articles.)

By William Lewisohn

IN LAST SUNDAY'S ARTICLE, the foreign relations of the Communist government of China were discussed. There remains to be described the effect of the recent upheaval on the domestic side.

The people of China have been between the devil and the deep blue sea. There is no need to enlarge on the misrule of the Kuomintang in recent years. This party had become extremely unpopular with all sections of the population or, as the Chinese say, had "forfeited the mandate of Heaven." That is not to say, however, that the Chinese public looked forward to the rule of the Communists. When, in 1946, you asked a Chinese who was complaining about the Kuomintang whether he preferred the Communists, he would shrug his shoulders and reply, "Well, they can't be any worse."

When, therefore, the Communist armies entered Peking, Tientsin and Shanghai, they were received by the mass of the population with only moderate enthusiasm. The attitude was one of indifference or, rather, one of curiosity not unmixed with suspicion. Indeed, after a few weeks the old Chinese saying was much quoted: "The names on the menu are changed, but not the contents of the dishes."

A small section of the population—curiously enough, seeing that the Communists claimed to represent the proletariat, not among the poorer classes—was loud in its demonstrations of welcome. These enthusiasts included the students, among whom the Communists had long been carrying on secret propaganda and who in recent years had got completely out of hand. Sit-down strikes in the colleges, and violent antigovernment demonstrations and parades were the order of the day under the Kuomintang.

After a few months of Communist rule, however, there has been a certain revulsion of feeling among many of the students, and much grumbling, though it is no longer expressed openly. The reasons for this are that the quality of the meals, which are supplied free to students, has deteriorated, and that they are no longer allowed to express their opinions in public by parades and demonstrations. The only public demonstrations allowed are those planned by the new rulers for some political purpose of their own.

Actually, the number of the students at some of the universities has fallen off considerably, because many of them have been lured away by the special school set up to train administrators. They are promised a job after only six months, saving them the more strenuous university course, even though that has been cut to two years.

There is also a large body of university professors and disgruntled politicians, who had hitherto shown no particular enthusiasm for Communist principles, now climbing onto the Communist bandwagon.

The wealthy classes, needless to say, with few exceptions are violent opponents of the new system, though they do not venture to air their opinions publicly.

Real Estate Fizzle

AMONG the peasantry and the urban working class, there is also considerable discontent with the new government. These mostly uneducated and completely unpolitical groups had been led to expect a great and immediate improvement in their living conditions. The peasants are bitterly disappointed over the redistribution of the land. It seemed wonderful when they were given their acre—or whatever the amount was—to dispose of if they wanted to. Actually, it did not work out that way, for there were no buyers. Nobody was anxious to acquire land beyond his own holding, for fear he would then be regarded as one of the "wealthy landowners" and the extra land would be taken away from him in some fresh redistribution.

Moreover, the peasants are very heavily taxed, the government taking 40 percent of their produce for the army. The remaining 60 percent the peasant has to hand over to the farmers' union which controls the village or group of villages, and each family then receives a daily ration from this general store.

Then, too, the life of the peasants is strictly regimented. At the head of each district there is a Communist "commissar," generally some young student, who even decides what crops are to be sown and what labor is to be commandeered for public works. The peasants have to attend political meetings several times a week, and the details of their life are interfered with in every way.

Prices Still Climbing

THE URBAN workers are little better pleased with the new dispensation. After the extravagant promises made them by Communist propaganda, they are disappointed that the cost of living not only has not gone down, but has increased. Wages have not been increased, owing to the bad state of trade, while the quality of commodities has fallen off because of the lack of imported material.

Many workers had expected that when the Communists took over the cities, the capital and stocks of the big concerns would be divided up among them in the same way as had been done with the land in the countryside. Communists had considerable difficulty in explaining that such a division would ruin the businesses of which the workers were now the owners. The only advantage the workers appear to have reaped so far—if it is an advantage—is that in all factories, businesses and public offices, "workers' councils" have been set up to fix wages, salaries, working hours, the distribution of profits and sometimes even the whole business policy.

Large numbers of workers have been thrown out of employment by the Communist campaign against the wealthy classes, part of which has been the suppression of all so-called unproductive trades, such as goldsmiths, silversmiths and the production of luxury goods.

Undeterred by the undercurrent of grumbling, however, the doctrinaire Communist leaders are pursuing their Marxist economic policies. Their efforts to impose their theories on the people are supported by an intensive campaign of propaganda through the press, radio and government bookshops selling only Marxist literature, and by complete control of all the arts, including theater and cinema. Privately-owned newspapers have either been suppressed or taken over by the government. The official newspapers contain nothing but propaganda and are unutterably dull. There is no local gossip or general news about China, and the only foreign news is from the Russian news agency, Tass.

The old Chinese plays, which used to be so popular among the lower classes, have been forbidden, as tending to spread superstitious, feudal or counter-revolutionary ideas. The propaganda plays which have taken their place bore the public, with disastrous results on the box office. Painting, sculpture, literature and the other arts are permitted only if they draw their inspiration from the lives of the workers and peasants.

Children Are Informers

THE Communists are making the most determined efforts to undermine the family, which was once such an important influence in Chinese life. Children are ordered to attend Communist schools for indoctrination, whether their parents like it or not. Marriage without parental consent is encouraged.

In general, it may be said that the Communist rulers pay little attention to that part of the population over 30. Their interest is concentrated on the generation now growing up. A widespread informer system has been introduced, in the countryside in each village and in the towns in each street; and children are encouraged to report criticisms of the regime by their parents or other relatives.

The argument that communism is opposed to the character and the whole tradition of the Chinese people, even if true, does not necessarily mean that it cannot be imposed on the country. The Chinese are a reasonable and practical-minded people with a strong strain of individualism. But the point to be remembered is that they have no democratic traditions, they are accustomed to being ruled from above and they have always accepted such rule with complete docility, provided it gave them peace and order and reasonable living conditions.

Communist students dance just outside the Forbidden City in Peiping. Some students are turning against the new regime because their free food is poorer and because now they can dance only to the tunes of Communist rulers.

On the other hand, the new Communist rulers are a close-knit, well-disciplined body of fanatics, prepared to go to any extremes in order to introduce the Communist system. It would seem to be highly improbable that any revolt against the system from outside the Communist Party could ever succeed. If the Communist rule in China were overthrown, it could only be by an external war or by a split in the party itself, leading to fresh civil war.

William Lewisohn, author of this article, has lived in China 40 of his 65 years. Now en route to London, he has been a China correspondent for the Times of London since 1940, and was the last foreign correspondent to leave Peiping, September 30.

'Friendship' Spread Thick By Russians

By Edwin D. Gritz
Post Reporter

SELLING "friendship" is keeping Soviet salesmen busier than ever. Their biggest new business is in such virgin territories as China and East Germany, where competition is practically nonexistent.

Even though China is still torn by war, Moscow already has been told that "preparatory work" for a powerful Soviet-Chinese Friendship Society has been completed. This means that the basis for future political control of China is just about set.

In a revealing progress report, Liu Shao-chi of the Chinese Communist Politburo told his counterparts in Moscow: "The fact that popular masses in various parts of China are enthusiastically joining the society proves that the Chinese people are striving in a most sincere manner to collaborate with the USSR and the Soviet people, regarding this as their urgent task."

Liu said that close Chinese-Soviet ties are inevitable since "the history of the last 30 years has clearly proved that the peoples of the two great countries . . . love each other like brothers."

As for East Germany, Berlin Communists reported three weeks ago that "the original aim to raise the membership of the German-Soviet Friendship Society to 50,000 was reached at the beginning of November."

In Thuringia, the southern part of East Germany, the society's regional executive committee informed Moscow that it would have 100,000 members by December 21 as a birthday present for Stalin.

A Solar System

SUCH reports reveal Moscow's continuing efforts to first create a psychology of friendship for later political exploitation.

As originally designed at the sixth plenum of the Communist International's executive committee some 23 years ago, Soviet friendship societies have operated as "a whole solar system" of organizations around the Communist Party, "although not under its mechanical guidance."

Brightest light of this solar system, of course, is Russia's own All-Union Society for Cultural Relations with Foreign Countries, known by its Russian initials as VOKS. Together with affiliates throughout the world, this biggest and most important of all Russian "public" societies numbers many million adherents.

VOKS' influence is most cogently revealed in reports from fellow societies. The Czechoslovak-Soviet Friendship Society boasted the other day that it had increased its membership in Slovakia by 50,000 in the past two weeks. In a special round-up report, the Finnish-Soviet Friendship Society listed "about 200,000 active protagonists," the Italo-Soviet Society 350,000, and the Romanian-Soviet Society four million.

Oysters on Side

STALIN, like any other party boss, obviously realizes that an oyster roast pays bigger dividends than political oratory. Moscow, however, has developed the friendly approach into a political science. An example of this was the November observance of German-Soviet friendship month. The Berlin announcement of plans for the celebration said in part:

"For the next four weeks all cultural organs of the German Democratic Republic will help to deepen that friendship by the showing of Soviet films and plays and by holding lectures and discussions . . ."

In subsequent accounts of the observance, it was noted that "60 Soviet engineers had entered into a fruiful exchange of ideas with their German colleagues," that German and Soviet teachers met at Leipzig and that German-Soviet students held a giant rally at Halle.

Despite efforts to keep the societies primarily cultural and nonpolitical, ideological undertones often break through, as in the Third Congress of the Finland-USSR Society November 24. One speaker declared:

"We know that the peoples of the Soviet Union, led by Generalissimo Stalin, always pursued a friendly and peaceful policy toward Finland. The Soviet Union is the sure bastion of freedom and independence of our country."

26 Million Hearers

THE SCOPE and programs of the Soviet friendship societies are detailed in a five-year summary of activities sponsored by the Romanian Society for Strengthening Relations with the U.S.S.R., otherwise known as ARLUS. It reported, among many things:

"In the first nine months of this year, for example, the society arranged some 200,000 meetings, conferences and literary gatherings with a total attendance of over 26 million people.

"There were many thousands of interested visitors to the various ARLUS photograph exhibitions: 'The Soviet Union in the Van of the Peace Movement,' 'The Collective Farms Bring the Soviet Peasantry Prosperity and Happiness,' and others.

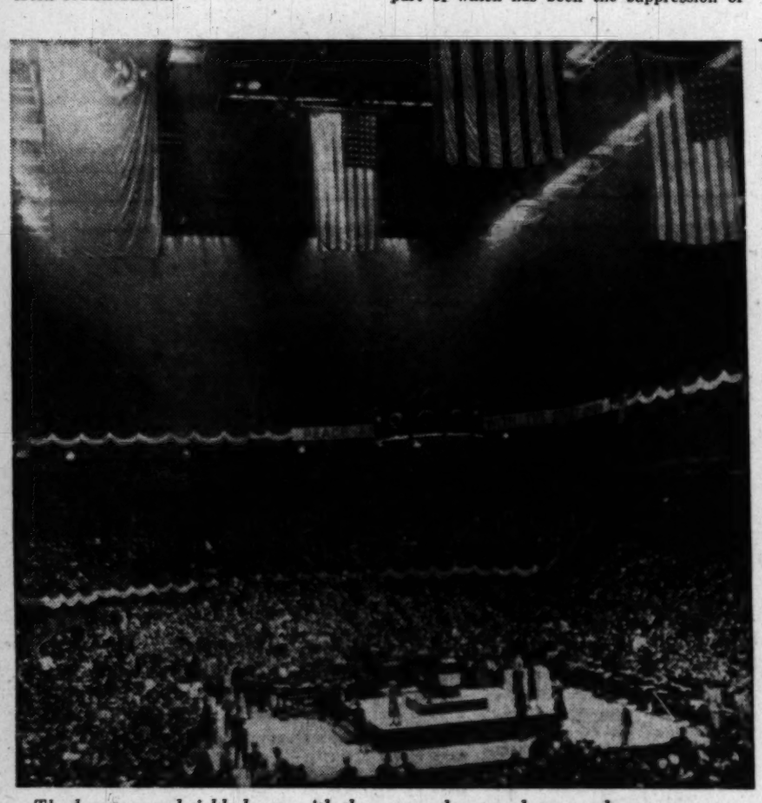
"The society's publishing house has brought out 676 Soviet books in the Romanian, Hungarian and other languages in a total of about eight million copies.

"One of the major objects of ARLUS is to popularize the progressive working methods employed in Soviet industry."

Latin America also is not without its pro-Soviet friendship societies. There, however, they are smaller and are sponsored mostly by intellectuals. But, as in Europe, they publish their own magazines and hold many concerts, lectures and observances on Soviet themes.

The American counterpart of the usual Soviet friendship society is the National Council of American-Soviet Friendship. After many ups and downs it is again becoming articulate, and with little if any effort to subordinate politics to culture.

For example, at a three-day New York meeting which ended December 5, council speakers called for destruction of the American stockpile of atomic bombs, demanded normal trade relations with Russia, and pressed for reductions in United States armaments.



The hammer and sickle hangs with the Stars and Stripes over the December 5 rally of the National Council of Soviet-American Friendship at Madison Square Garden. About 9500 persons turned out to hear speakers urge outlawing of the atom bomb, world-wide disarmament, normal trade between the West and the Russian bloc and recognition of the Chinese Reds

U. S. Hand Plain in World Labor Setup

By David Lasser

Mr. Lasser, who attended the London meetings, is a former labor consultant to both the ECA and the Commerce Department.

AFTER two weeks of work in London, 250 leaders of world labor have created a new instrument to fight totalitarianism and to win labor's economic and social demands.

The International Confederation of Free Trade Unions, with 48 million members in 50 nations, emerged from the London meetings. The power of this new movement, which was born out of disillusionment with the Communist-dominated World Federation of Trade Unions, should not be underestimated.

It has in its ranks labor movements which control the government or are a major governmental influence in Britain, Scandinavia and the Low Countries. Its affiliates in France and Italy are rising factors in government policy. The influence of the American unions is well known. And in the backward areas of the world the unions now part of the ICFTU will likely become the backbone of the drive to change the social systems which have kept the masses in poverty and misery.

The ICFTU represents a new departure in international labor groups, and the changes that mark it are the result of the great influence of the united AFL-CIO delegation. A break has been made with the prewar International Federation of Trade Unions, with its Socialist ideals and its close link with the Labor and Socialist International (which consisted of the Socialist parties of Europe). While the ICFTU is not anti-Socialist, it has responded to United States insistence that the organization concentrate on practical trade union tasks and avoid hopeful ideological statements about the future constitution of society.

A Better World

THIS does not mean that the ICFTU did not look into the future to see what kind of a world free labor wanted. It called for a world of "economic security, social justice and political freedom." It elaborated on what measures were necessary to achieve that. But it avoided laying down any blueprint on the political pattern necessary.

By its emphasis on practical objectives, however—higher living standards everywhere, minimum wages, a guaranteed weekly and annual wage (again an American contribution); the industrialization of backward areas, with freedom from imperialist exploitation, the building up of weak trade union movements—the ICFTU may become more revolutionary than its socialist forerunner.

What was most marked among the dozens of delegations from backward areas was the desire for industrialization and their trust that America means to carry out President Truman's Point IV program. The final result is that there is a world-wide movement among workers to acquire the means whereby America has become so powerful economically, and whereby American labor has achieved its high standard of living.

The effect of this contact between the workers of the industralized and less industrialized nations is likely to be immense. The appetite for machinery and higher living standards, for freedom of trade unions, for independence and political democracy will be sharpened as the results of this meeting spread over Latin America, Africa and Asia.

Power in Leash

THE American and Canadian delegations represented nearly one third of the membership of the ICFTU. But their influence was greater than their strength, largely because they were united. The leaders of the American delegations, Green, Meany, Dubinsky and others of the AFL; Reuther, McDonald and Haywood of the CIO, were conscious of the fact that influence should not mean domination. The American role, as they expressed it, must be to try to help, to provide the results of American experiences for world use.

That international unity on the trade union front may have important repercussions at home was expressed by both CIO and AFL leaders. There is a conviction that after this experience it will be more difficult to keep up their points of conflict. In a sense, just as Cominform activities have driven together the free nations and free trade unions, so they have driven together the quarreling American trade unions.

There is nothing in the constitution or program of the new organization requiring union movements to abandon socialist orientations. The provisions for the setting up of regional bodies, paralleling those of the U. N. and ILO, make it possible for the European unions to deal with their problems on the basis of local conditions. Thus, overcentralization, which was one of the curses of the WFTU, will be avoided.

Within its extremely limited budget of about $300,000 a year, the new organization set itself a number of important tasks. The first is aid on both a financial and organizational basis to young, struggling unions, especially where they are menaced by either Communist or government or employer oppression. High priority will probably be given to the non-Communist unions in France and Italy and in Asia.

Second, the organization will move to secure recognition by the Economic and Social Council, ILO, the Food and Agriculture Organization, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and the World Health Organization. Thus the "cold war" within the U. N. will assume a new character, for there will undoubtedly be bitter conflict between the ICFTU and the WFTU in these agencies on issues of "forced labor," free trade unionism, peace and roads to full employment.

Oppose Spanish Aid

THE ICFTU spoke out on a number of foreign policy issues. A strong resolution, supported by the entire American delegation, opposed any financial aid to or recognition of Franco Spain in terms of the North Atlantic Pact.

What may prove to be one of the most significant actions of the ICFTU was the statement that "by every means at our disposal we shall carry this message to the peoples imprisoned in totalitarian slave states." In terms of the Communist states there now opens to democracy for the first time since 1918 the possibility of a vast propaganda counteroffensive, stirring the discontent of workers with low living standards. The Communist weapon of infiltration will now be used against itself.

The resolution on Latin America condemns military dictatorships. In Japan and Germany the ICFTU will work to give the postwar labor movements a greater voice in the decisions that will determine their economic and social future. It is the view of the ICFTU that these labor movements must be supported to prevent the revival of militarism or of the economic monopolies which were allied with militarism.

Much of the practical work of the ICFTU will be carried on through its collaboration with the International Trade Organization secretariats, which organize unions internationally by their trades and occupations. The 20 secretariats have more than 20 million members and exert great influence on wages and working conditions. The ICFTU will work with the ILO to arrive at more international conventions on these points.

On the issue of peace, the meeting adopted a six-point program including nonaggression on the territory of any people, strengthening of the U. N., ending the abuse of U. N. vetoes, universal control of atomic energy and progressive disarmament with a U. N. force to keep the peace.

For the first time in an international labor movement the ICFTU leadership comes mainly from the small nations. J. H. Oldenbroek, the general secretary, is from Holland, while the president, Paul Finet, is from Belgium, where the headquarters is located.

Oldenbroek, who will administer the organization, built the International Transport Workers Federation into one of the most successful of the trade secretariats. Finet, who heads the Belgian Federation of Labor, has a long record in international labor affairs. Representatives of the AFL and CIO will be part of an administrative committee which will be consulted on all important issues.

A Pigmy 'Colonel' Learns Democracy

By Robert P. Martin

CLARK AIR FORCE BASE, PHILIPPINES (ONA)—One of the world's most curious "alliances" exists at this westernmost American outpost in the Pacific. The "alliance" unites Americans and the Negritos, a Philippine tribe of pigmies who live just outside the field.

Clark Field occupies a curious position. Its men and officers are at peace. But beyond the elaborate fences and defense works, war and banditry have clamped a suffocating hold on the Filipinos. Almost nightly, gunfire can be heard as the Philippine Constabularly clashes with the Hukbalahaps, the Communist-led peasants who are in sporadic revolt against the government. A few Americans have been wounded or killed in ambushes outside the base.

Filipino civilian workers are carefully scrutinized, and occasionally searched, when they leave or enter Clark Air Force Base. There is only one exception to this rule, the Negritos, who can enter the base at will without passes. Their childlike enthusiasm, honesty and friendliness have endeared them to most Americans. They sell their primitive handicraft, primarily bows and arrows, outside the camp's PX, or earn a few slices of bread cutting the lawns of American homes.

IT IS difficult to sift legend from fact here but, according to the accepted story, the Negrito-American friendship started during the Japanese occupation. A pet carabou belonging to Loxamano, a Negrito chief, was killed by stepping on a Japanese land mine. This so enraged Loxamano that he declared war on the Japanese.

During this personal crusade, he and his followers killed a score or more Japanese. An American major who was leading Filipino guerillas on Luzon heard of the exploits, called on Loxamano and personally pinned his only set of oak leaves on the Negrito chief. When Loxamano had killed 50 Japanese, he was "promoted" to lieutenant colonel.

Loxamano still proudly wears his "uniform" of ill-fitting (he is less than 5 feet tall) cast-off GI clothing and United States insignia when he receives visitors. His wizened face, topped by a crown of kinky, brittle hair, worn high in the style of the Fijians, lights up in welcome. He introduces only two of his wives—the third is "very bashful" because she is only 14 years old.

His house, made of discarded lumber and tin sheets, is a palace in his ungreedy eyes. And in a way it is a palace. Loxamano has absolute power in his tribe. He is the sole judge and can execute those who break the tribal laws.

The Negritos have had one experience with democracy, American-style. Alphonso, the nominal king of the tribe, made a tour of Luzon hoping to unite all the Negrito tribes. During his absence, Loxamano decided he wanted to be king. He took the problem to an American officer, who advised that an election be held.

Alphonso won the election. Extremely unhappy, Loxamano visited another American officer whom he admired tremendously and explained his problem. The officer, a lieutenant colonel, told Loxamano that only a few months before he himself had been reduced in rank and had been given a subordinate position. He had accepted both gracefully, and was still doing his job with no thought of revolt. This so impressed Loxamano that he agreed to become Alphonso's assistant.

On the air base, the Negritos appear to get their biggest thrill in riding, chattering and screaming, on American jeeps. But, according to American officers here, the Negritos are very deadly enemies. The Hukbalahaps give the pigmies a wide berth and never raid their villages. The Negritos are crack shots with bows and arrows.

INP Kept Busy 'Untwisting' News of U. S.

By Emily Towe

Washington Newspaper Contributor

AN Indian businessman rushed into the United States Information Service Center in Bombay waving a bag of fresh doughnuts. He urged the information officer to sample his pastry on the spot. The turbaned visitor explained that he had bought an American doughnut machine and wanted to be sure that he was making his product authentically American.

This Indian is one of millions of persons over the world seeking knowledge about the United States. People who know practically nothing of how Americans live and work and play besiege information officers with myriad questions, ranging from how we solve sociological problems to the possible use of Donald Duck's pogo sticks to solve transportation difficulties in an overcrowded Asiatic country.

Working toward a mutual understanding with other peoples of the world and seeking to combat Communist propaganda against the United States, Congress commissioned the State Department under the Smith-Mundt Act to tell the story of America in other countries through the press, radio, motion pictures and libraries.

The program also provides for the exchange of persons in educational, cultural, scientific and technical fields. The radio broadcasts to foreign countries are known as the "Voice of America."

Pierces the Curtain

THE International Press and Publications Division (INP) of the State Department sends out material that tells America's story in the foreign press and in photographic displays. Some of the INP information penetrates the Iron Curtain and the magazine "Amerika" reaches the Russian capital, where it is read and resold many times. Jack C. McDermott, former Texas newspaper publisher, is division chief.

INP does not compete with private news agencies but augments the latter's services abroad. United States Information Service representatives call on editors to offer them stories and photographs. They also arrange for picture displays in public places and group showings of film strips prepared in the INP photographic branch.

The Wireless Bulletin is flashed so rapidly by Morse code to 55 embassies over the world that 20 minutes after the writer pulls copy from his typewriter in the news room here, the story is being received as far away as Kabul, Afghanistan, and Reykjavik, Iceland. These bulletins of 7000 words daily include the official views of the Government in the form of important speeches, Government releases and significant news stories.

In preparing articles, weekly columns, biographies, photographs and special material requested by embassies to correct published distortions, INP considers how the information will help foreign peoples in the special living difficulties of their environments.

For example, the island of Sardinia recently asked for a story on commercial uses for its abundance of cork, and India, starting as a nation, wants to know how the United States is handling such matters as taxation, labor-management relations, banking and insurance.

A young Pole in Warsaw reads an article on Benjamin Franklin in a back copy of Amerika. Some 1945 issues are still being thumbed there

Women Want Ideas

THERE IS widespread interest in American home life, culture, sports, dress, scenery and personalities—especially those of Hollywood. But the news that best fits into the aims of the program is that which fills some special personal need—in medicine, nutrition, child care, house building, labor saving, agricultural practices and industrial production.

Women of the Middle East, who are becoming more self-assertive, are eager to know more of American women—how they dress, make themselves attractive and accomplish their household chores.

Surprising requests are sometimes received: a Middle Eastern desert country asks for a story on ice-skating, and an Asiatic city wants to know all about American jazz.

Much of the information sent by INP is designed to correct erroneous impressions created by anti-American propaganda. Communists had spread the story in several countries that Ellis Island is like a concentration camp. A staff member was sent to New York to get a full feature story on that point of entry to the United States.

Several years ago, an eastern European newspaper carried this banner line: "Thousands of American Government Workers Shot in Washington!" The information officer in the United States Embassy there called on the editor to learn the source of that startling news. The editor pointed to a report that "thousands had been fired in Washington." The American made clear to the European the difference between firing and shooting in American speech.

The Potato 'Scandal'

WORD THAT the United States was burning part of its bumper potato crop in 1947 reached countries where people were starving. Information officers cabled INP for the true story to counteract criticism abroad.

Prompt replies explained the situation:

While it was true that some potatoes had been burned, the United States had made exhaustive efforts to find uses for the surplus. It had offered to sell potatoes to UNRRA and to foreign countries at one fiftieth the amount the Government had paid farmers under the price-support program. The offer was turned down because potatoes are highly perishable and low in food content as compared with wheat flour. One European country had refused them because the United States could not guarantee that the potatoes were free of certain plant diseases.

The information officers are public relations representatives for the United States. Many are former newspaper men and women who speak the languages of the countries to which they are assigned. They also speak American.

Last year, an information officer was notified that his Middle Eastern post would receive a new regional wireless service of material of particular interest to that country, supplementing the Wireless Bulletin. He replied: "Now you're cooking on the front burner!"

NATIONAL AFFAIRS

Sen. Millikin Has Surprise Opposition

By Roscoe Fleming

Denver Newspaperman and Magazine Contributor

DENVER—A little story in the Denver Post recently surprised Coloradoans more than anything political since November 3, 1948, when they woke up to realize they had voted for Harry Truman.

This story announced the results of a State-wide poll taken for the Denver Post by Research Services, Inc., which showed that, as of now, Democratic Representative John Carroll of Denver could defeat Republican Senator Eugene D. Millikin for the senatorship about 5 votes to 4.

Senator Millikin must run for his present office—or give it up—in 1950, and the genial and able conservative had made such progress toward the Republican Party top command that most Coloradoans had subconsciously assumed he'd be mighty hard to beat.

They had discounted Carroll, although he seems to have made good in a terrific way in Washington and within the party, because it was assumed he was little known outside of Denver and would run badly out-State against Senator Millikin.

In fact, "everyone" had assumed that the only Democrat able to beat Millikin would be Gov. William Lee Knous, likewise able and genial, veteran of many terms in the Legislature and of a decade on the Colorado Supreme Court bench, and everyone's friend.

Weatherman Helped

FOR THE background of a political picture that's as tangled as a plate of spaghetti:

The big he-coon of Colorado Democratic politics—and he proves it every time anyone challenges him—is brash and voluble Senator Edwin Carl Johnson.

He and Governor Knous are long-time political buddies. In fact, Senator Johnson came back to Colorado in 1946 and campaigned all over the State with "Lee," as everyone calls him. Aided by a blizzard which kept the Republican farmers at home while the Democratic city-slickers voted, he hauled Knous over the finish line barely ahead of the Republican gubernatorial candidate.

In the same election John Carroll, without benefit of blizzard—since his district exactly comprises the city of Denver—and distinctly without benefit of Johnson, unseated an incumbent Republican Congressman. If you remember 1946, that was something of a miracle. Only in three districts in the United States was it accomplished.

Carroll went on to Washington to wage and win some big fights, and to get promotion within the party about as fast as any young Representative ever did.

SEN. JOHNSON SEN. MILLIKIN REP. CARROLL

Young House member is bucking a powerful "team"

Earlier Poll Adverse

JOHNSON has never cared for (a) potential rivals within the party and (b) Carroll specifically, since the latter was campaign manager for Josephine Roche when the new coal miners' pension trustee ran against Johnson in a bitter campaign for Governor back in the early thirties.

So "everyone" in Colorado assumed that Governor Knous was the only Democrat in Colorado who could beat Millikin. To put it more bluntly, "everyone" assumed that he was the only Democrat Ed Johnson would allow to beat Millikin.

The friendship between Johnson and Millikin is well known as transcending party lines, and when Johnson doesn't like someone on the Democratic ticket or has no particular interest in a campaign, he is one of the most accomplished footdraggers you ever saw.

"Everyone" assumed that is, except John Carroll. The aggressive young Representative has acted from the first as though he intended to be a candidate for the Senate, though carefully not saying.

But Lee Knous was conceded a sure victory if he ran against Millikin—a concession solidly backed by a previous Denver Post poll which showed him virtually 2 to 1 over Millikin—and Carroll was given only a dim chance against the "team" of Millikin and Johnson.

Judgeship Involved

SO MATTERS stood a few months ago when Federal District Judge John Foster Symes, Colorado's grand old man of the Federal bench, announced that he wished to retire after nearly 30 years.

(His friends say the veteran judge, a Republican, has been trying to hold on for a Republican President, but has decided he might have to live to be as old as Methuselah.)

Automatically, Lee Knous became the favored candidate for the judgeship—and is receptive. Johnson has recommended him for appointment. Whether it is because President Truman is sore at Johnson for footdragging on party matters or not, he hasn't sent Knous' name to the Senate.

Whether he does so eventually or not, John Carroll is by now so encouraged that he probably will run, Knous or no Knous, and a wing-ding of a primary battle may be fought.

If Knous does go to the Federal bench, it is almost sure to be Carroll for the Senate. However, another brash young Democrat, Attorney General John W. Metzger, might come into the picture. Never one to leave his own horn untooted, Metzger said recently that Senator Johnson thinks he (Metzger) is fearless, capable and honest, and thinks him a logical candidate for the governorship. But Metzger said that so far he is not a candidate. A Knous-Metzger ticket for Senator and Governor, respectively, might retire Carroll to private life.

Personal Liberties vs. National Security

THE report of the Committee for Economic Development, on "National Security and Our Individual Freedom," was made public last week. It is devoted to an analysis of the dilemma which comes from the fact that the present national security program "is a necessary and, at the same time, a dangerous force in our society."

The report argues that the best protection against the danger is the maintenance of civilian supremacy and control of the security problem and the exercise of constant vigilance at all levels—the Congress, the Executive and the public—to see that personal liberties and the free economy are not undermined in the name of security.

Some highlights of the report are quoted below:

THE FEAR of war may dominate our lives for a generation. The imminent threat of war will rise and fall; we may face alternating periods of optimism and pessimism, but the threat may last for decades. We must assume that war is not inevitable but we must also assume that there is little prospect of genuine peace in the near future. Large scale measures for national security seem necessary for years to come.

Neither national security nor individual freedom can be absolute. Both can be increased by improved efficiency and balance within the security program. But measures to increase one can operate to decrease the other. Where there is such conflict, the problem is to work out an acceptable balance. Just how much we allow security measures to impair freedom must depend on circumstances, and the relative risks to security on the one hand and to the survival of free institutions on the other.

At the present time, the balance must be weighed in the direction of freedom. Freedom itself contributes to security. Freedom of scientific inquiry contributes to the production of improved weapons. The maintenance of a free economy encourages the development of economic strength and the growth of a strong, self-reliant people. The maintenance of individual freedoms creates the greatest bulwark of our security—the energy and intelligence of free men working together to build and to save their own and their country's freedom.

Even more important, freedom and the dignity of the individual are the very foundation of our society, and the ends for which we are striving. Without them, security loses its purpose.

The purpose of . . . civilian control of the military is clear—(1) to protect free institutions, (2) to insure that military measures fit into the larger programs of national security and national policy of which the military is only a part, and (3) to promote efficiency in the military establishment itself.

There is today no direct challenge to the prineiple of civilian supremacy nor to the legal chain through which it can be exercised. But the magnitude and character of our security program make the effective exercise of civilian supremacy increasingly difficult and all the more necessary.

THE citizen needs much basic information he now lacks. The Government must withhold certain specific information in order to keep it from potential enemies. The problem is where to draw the line.

Recently the line has been drawn heavily on the side of secrecy. Our Government is following a much more comprehensive program of secrecy than in any previous period when we were not at war. Moreover, our people have been cut off from important information through censorship, both formal and informal, by foreign governments. To an unprecedented degree the public is depending for its foreign intelligence upon what our own Government agencies decide to disclose.

We must deal vigorously and effectively with subversive activities. But we must also maintain the safeguards of individual liberty. A threat to our liberty arises when the loyalty of individual American citizens is called into question. First, the loyalty of Government employes is examined. Then investigations extend to the managers and employes of industries working on defense contracts. Suspicion readily spreads to scientists, educators and students engaged in research. An atmosphere of suspicion favors the growth of political police.

A balance must be kept between the security program and programs serving other objectives of national policy. In particular, welfare programs compete with the security program for funds. Yet welfare programs can contribute to security by reducing inequities in our system that provide effective ammunition for hostile propaganda.

There is constant need for more intensive public discussion of the problems of security and freedom. Public opinion is not as effective as it should be so long as it depends largely on random exposure to news and comment. Unless there is a comprehensive framework of discussion, the public will be confused.

Various means are available for stimulating public discussion of security issues. Congressional hearings can act as a stimulus. The President's message on national security would provide a basis for discussion. News editors should invite discussion and radio time should be allocated to this purpose. Special forums throughout the Nation should be sponsored by universities, civic associations and other groups of citizens.

The present security program tends to be unbalanced; it tends to overemphasize the military at the expense of non-military measures. An informed diplomatic service, a strengthened Voice of America and a more effective intelligence system would cost relatively little compared to military arms. Their contribution to security could be many times that of an equal expenditure.

Chennault Pines for Flush 'Partners'

By Robert P. Martin

TOKYO (ONA). — The magic formula which paid huge dividends in China is proving somewhat less successful in other parts of Asia for Maj. Gen. Claire L. Chennault, commander of the United States Fourteenth Air Force in World War II.

Chennault evolved his comparatively simple formula in the early postwar years after UNRRA had provided most of the capital for Civil Air Transport, the fledgling airline he started to transport relief supplies to remote areas of China. The formula: establish a nebulous partnership with an anti-Communist government, preferably one which is fighting Chinese Communists and therefore is in a position to inherit American-aid dollars, and then make profits from business operations on the side.

When it became obvious that the Nationalists had lost the civil war and that the United States was not going to bail out Chiang Kai-shek, Chennault began to look for new areas which he might help "defend," preferably ones where he could also pick up a few extra dollars.

His scouts nosed around the Middle East for some time. Reports say the British and American oil companies had already heard somewhat unfavorable reports about some of Chennault's business activities in China. These included International Suppliers Corp., a Chennault subsidiary, which specialized in purchasing commodities, raw materials and other valuable products in besieged cities which Chennault was supplying by air.

These goods were purchased at a fraction of their value and flown out to areas where they commanded high prices. Since ISC chartered most of the flights, it could also charge high premiums (usually collected in gold bars or silver) from passengers seeking to escape Communist-surrounded cities.

Moreover, Middle East airlines, many of them government-owned, looked with suspicion, if not downright hostility, on any encroachment on their preserves. Chennault's scouts apparently reported that the Middle East would remain closed to their operations, at least for a time.

Snags in Japan

HE THEN turned his attention to Japan and Korea, two fairly promising countries for an adventurous air transport company. Neither country has a domestic airline; both have anti-Communist governments and are reasonably sure of receiving American dollars in the future.

Japan, especially, offered great opportunities for a man of Chennault's gifts. Unless there is a radical change in the American attitude, Japan will not be permitted to operate civilian airlines. Yet it needs and can support a domestic airline network. Several of Gen. Douglas MacArthur's lieutenants were enthusiastic over the Chennault plans.

The retired general, however, encountered two snags. The United States Air Force controls all fields in Japan. It has a noticeable lack of sympathy for civilians who want to use Army communications and ground facilities, and there are no others in Japan. Civilian transports, in the eyes of the Army, would also "clutter" Japan's airways and hamper security measures.

Chennault's strongest opposition, however, came from Northwest Airlines and Pan-American Airways, both of which service Japan with their international routes. They have also applied for franchises to operate domestic lines in Japan, but have not yet received permission. Obviously, neither American flag line would be willing to let a late-comer like Chennault take the gravy in Japan.

Reports in Tokyo are that General Chennault is dickering with the two American lines, as well as with other international companies, to form a jointly owned international company. He would provide the planes and crews, which are already in the Far East, and the other companies would underwrite costs of getting the line into operation. The Japanese government would finance the reopening of small feeder fields. No one in Tokyo, however, seems to know whether these reported negotiations have made any headway.

A Chiang Tie-up

CHENNAULT also recently visited southern Korea, where he conferred with President Syngman Rhee. The general said he has no intention "at this time" of extending his operations to Korea. But in view of Korea's geographical proximity to Formosa, to which Chiang Kai-shek has now fled, and Chiang's previous efforts to establish an anti-Communist alliance among Korea, Nationalist China (now more or less reduced to Formosa) and the Philippines, Chennault might find it worthwhile to enter the Korean field, although it would never be as profitable as Japan.

If Chennault does get into Korea, he almost certainly will resume his unofficial position as chief spokesman for any American plan to save Asia from communism through use of force. His hatred of communism seems to increase in direct proportion to any communist menace to his business.

After the Nationalist collapse in north and central China, Chennault reiterated to Congress his theory that south China could be held at an annual cost no greater than that of the Berlin airlift. He also told about the "fighting Moslems" in northwest China who would never surrender to the Communists, and advocated immediate United States aid.

Chennault knew that west and northwest China could be supplied only by air, and that his was the only line in a position to handle such American aid. By sheer coincidence, Chennault's most profitable operations at the time were flying wool and rugs from the northwest and tin concentrate from southwest China to the outside world. But the Moslems didn't fight, and south China has folded almost without a struggle.

A German Boast Found Submerged

OSLO, Norway (ONA).—Norwegian workmen salvaging parts of the German battleship Tirpitz have presented the British Royal Air Force with a painting depicting the German fleet's might which they found adorning a bulkhead in one of the submerged engine rooms.

Titled "Gegen Engeland" (On to England), the painting depicts the Tirpitz, a U-boat and the German flag. The pride of the German Navy was sunk November 12, 1944, by RAF planes in a Norwegian fjord near Tromso. The Norwegian workmen decided that the painting should really go "on to England."

Swallowtails With Your Turnip Pie

By Edwin Newman

Former Washington Newspaperman, now with NBC in London.

THE subject of food is never very far from an Englishman's mind. If he does reach the blissful point where he can swallow his meals without a quiver of pain, rage or despair, something always happens to bring his diet once more to the forefront of his attention. There have been three such recent events.

The first was the announcement of the annual Christmas "extras" by Food Minister John Strachey—a drop or two of cooking fat here, a few ounces of tea and chocolate there, permission to restaurants to serve turkey once during the holiday season, and, best of all, two extra pennies worth of meat a week. (That brought the weekly meat ration to about a pound, where it may stay for two months before dropping off again.)

The second was an exhibition by army cooks, which produced such wonders as pressed beef dressed and decorated to look like a chess board, and a dartboard composed of filets of sole. Of rather more interest to the spectators were two "token products," as the London Times described them: a glazed representation of a leg of ham, and a "boar's" head which was really the head of a calf.

It is also a matter of record that a British furniture company is advertising a chair in which the tired housewife may rest and perk up her spirits after making a carrot and turnip pie which was not a success.

Disregarding the appalling question of how a successful carrot and turnip pie might taste, it nevertheless is true that many Britons have not given up their pretensions and pretenses about their food. Some waitresses smirk as they put the inevitable cod or plaice, with cabbage or Brussels sprouts, before you, but a leading London newspaper recently carried an article by an author who said flatly: "America is not in it gastronomically with Britain"; and who had this sage advice for the French: "Look to your laurels!"

It may be a rare restaurant that can supply you with a napkin, but it is also a rare restaurant that doesn't have one or more flunkeys in tails to swoop you in and swoop you out. Even the most commonplace menus are often printed in French, which is surely a highly transparent camouflage. Furthermore, the Ministry of Labor is busy issuing catering wage regulations in fantastic and romantically academic detail.

To set these minimum wages, the country is divided into three geographical areas, and eating places into five types: hotels and rooming houses that serve alcohol and those that don't; restaurants that serve alcohol and those that don't, and restaurants maintained by institutions and by businesses for their employes. Wages vary not only from area to area but from type to type. In all cases, women are paid less than men in identical jobs.

For each type of eating place, a large booklet has been issued, covering dozens upon dozens of grades and definitions like these: "Barman or barman-waiter (England or Wales) means a male worker aged 21 or over who is employed in England or Wales and who is wholly or mainly engaged in dispensing or in dispensing and serving refreshment." "Barman (Scotland only) means a male worker aged 21 years or over who is employed in Scotland and who is wholly or mainly engaged in preparing, supplying and serving refreshment."

Grades for Everyone

IN THE nonalcoholic residential establishments, which may be so small that they have only four rooms to let, the government distinguishes 96 grades of workers. The 96 include such a rare bird as the chef de cuisine. He is defined as supervising the work of four chefs de partie (sectional cooks) and, as head man in the kitchen, the government considers him entitled to a minimum of 168 shillings and 9 pence a week, which is about $26.50 after devaluation.

That figure assumes he gets full board and room seven days a week. If all he gets is meals while on duty, he is entitled to 211 shillings and 6 pence in one area, 28 cents less in the second and 49 cents less than that in the third. If no meals, he's good for about 12 shillings more. This applies only to men, no chef de cuisine (female) being listed.

So it goes, through carver (male); chef entremetier (head vegetable and soup cook) (male); chef garde manger (head larder cook) (male); chef patissier; chef poissonier; chef rotisseur; chef saucier; fishmonger-poulterer; salad hands; sous chefs de cuisine, and waiters, whose pay has the added peculiarity of varying with their ages, etc., etc.

The definition of commis saucier (sauce cook) has a certain piquancy. He is "a male worker who has undergone not less than three years' training under a chef de cuisine or a chef de partie and who is employed under the immediate supervision of a chef saucier." The minimum prescribed for him, in the absence of any room and board, and in the highest paid area, is about $17 a week. The translation of eight kinds of chef into cook does not preclude 14 other definitions of cook, some of them listed forthrightly as cooks, others as various kinds of "commis."

In four of the five categories of eating places, the government proposals for wage grades now are law. The fifth is that of residential establishments not licensed to sell liquor. In this, the British Tourist and Holidays Board and the Scottish Tourist Board are protesting, and Minister of Labor George Isaacs is having another look.

The Scots maintain that in Scotland, at least, 86 of the 96 proposed grades don't exist. To the American tourist, who has stared in amazement at some of the stuff put before him in this country, the Scottish objection may seem well-founded for all the British Isles. As for most Britons, they'll go on getting fish and chips.

Home-Rule Drive

One fact stands out significantly from the renewed campaign for home rule in the District of Columbia. There are several ways in which a home-rule bill can be brought to a vote in the House, and it is generally assumed that if such a vote is taken Washington will be restored to its rightful place among America's self-governing communities. In other words, the home-rule bill can be passed in spite of the House District Committee if sufficient pressure is put behind it.

Representative Auchincloss is undoubtedly right in emphasizing the importance of aid from the President. Mr. Truman has emphatically stated his indorsement of the home-rule cause on several occasions. What is now needed is definite inclusion of the home-rule bill in the Administration's legislative program as one of the items for which it will fight in the 1950 session. The President's attitude will have an enormous bearing upon the fate of the petition to discharge the House District Committee from further consideration of the home-rule bill. For if the Administration is not actively pressing for enactment of this measure, many of its supporters in the House may feel justified in not signing the discharge petition. On the other hand, if home rule is given a favored place in the Administration's program, signature of the discharge petition will be an act of loyalty to the Administration in taking the issue out of the hands of the reactionaries who have bottled it up in the District Committee.

It should not be assumed, however, that either the President or the House leadership is going to hand this community self-governing rights on a silver platter. Both are likely to react to the attitude of the community itself. It is a favorable sign that the Central Suffrage Conference and other organizations sponsoring home rule are warming up for a major campaign. They need money as well as willing workers and wise direction at the top. The Suffrage Conference is to be congratulated on undertaking to raise funds to finance a sustained and systematic effort to get its message before Congress and the people. Funds will have to be forthcoming in much larger volume than has been the case to date, however, if this important movement is to have a fair chance in competing for attention in the hard-pressed Eighty-first Congress. Now is the time for citizens who wish to end their shameful deprivation of political rights to make their influence felt.

Another Airport

Survivors of the plane crash here Monday have good reason to be grateful for the existence of Bolling Field Hospital. There is nothing in the circumstances of this particular crash to indicate that the nearness of the Bolling Air Force Base and the Anacostia Naval Air Station to the National Airport had anything to do with the tragedy. But the location of two military air fields within a mile of National does present a continuing safety problem which has been pointed up by several near-collisions in the last few weeks. Inevitably three airports produce more congestion than one. Traffic patterns often conflict, and military aircraft generally have faster landing speeds than civilian types. The danger is especially great in bad weather.

It is encouraging to have the Washington Board of Trade now taking up the cudgels for the removal of military flights from Bolling and Anacostia. Jesse M. Hadley, chairman of the board's aviation committee, has recommended this step along with immediate action to acquire an alternate civilian airport for the Washington area. More adequate facilities, he notes, are essential both to restore public confidence in commercial flying and to avoid the loss of traffic to Baltimore.

Assuredly the abandonment of Bolling and Anacostia would cause some inconvenience to the military. The reserve training programs operated from these fields are important. But on the grounds of number of persons served and relative investment, the safeguarding of the National Airport becomes paramount. With some rearrangement, Andrews Field and the Patuxent Naval Air Station should be able to accommodate most of the military activities.

Certainly it is time to begin earnest consideration of another civilian airport. Senator Edwin Johnson has proposed a site 10 or 15 miles out in Maryland, and the National Capital Park and Planning Commission a year or so ago approved a location near Annandale, Va. The latter has the advantage of easy accessibility. But aside from planning for future needs the immediate problem is how to make better use of National. Removal of the Bolling-Anacostia menace is a first essential. Beyond this, congestion could be lessened by restricting National to commercial traffic and diverting private flights to the many smaller airports in the Washington area.

One Europe

The General Committee of the European Assembly will meet next Monday at Strasbourg in an atmosphere favorable to the notion of a general European confederation to include all states now remaining outside the Iron Curtain. It is well recognized in all those countries that the European nation-states have become obsolete and that nationalism if continued in the field of foreign policy will imperil all Europe.

In other words, the present division of Europe into sovereign states leaves none powerful enough to withstand the diplomatic or military pressures that may be applied by Russia on the one side or by the United States on the other. In any war between these two great concentrations of power Europe would inevitably become the battleground. The creation of a European union might, however, succeed in restoring a balance in favor of peace that the Soviet Union could not disturb. Most of the nations that would be included in such a union are already allied with the United States through the North Atlantic Pact.

The plan of union that appears to be finding most favor is one which follows the Swiss model and combines the maximum cultural diversity and domestic autonomy with unity in matters of foreign policy, currency, economic policy, and military defense. As has been pointed out to the general committee in a memorandum submitted by Count Coudenhove-Kalergi, secretary-general of the European Parliamentary Union:

> To assure the peace and independence of Europe would require a unified system of defense, a federal army under a supreme command, a rational armament production, and a European military budget. This cannot be carried out by compromises between a dozen sovereign governments and parliaments, but solely through the intervention of a federal government, which would be responsible before a European parliament.

But general recognition of the desirability of a federal government for Europe does not remove the problems that must be solved before any federation is possible. Foremost among them is the problem of Germany. It is generally agreed that Western Germany must be admitted to the proposed federation. But this would also end the hopes of Germans for the reunification of Germany. Eastern Germany could not, while it remains under Russian domination, be admitted to the union, and there seems to be no possibility that the Russian domination will be ended; nor will the Russians abandon agitating their plan for reuniting Germany under Communist or popular-front auspices.

The Germans, it seems, are beginning to exploit the advantages arising out of their strategic position, and some of them seem to think that Germany's former position and power in the world can be regained by playing Russia against the West, as was done so successfully by Rathenau and Stresemann after the First World War. The fear that the Germans may play this game again is very much alive among Germany's neighbors. But this, according to the Coudenhove-Kalergi memorandum, is another impelling reason why Western Germany must be admitted to the European union on equal terms; for the fears of her neighbors can be set at rest only by the presence of > . . . a strong and unquestioned authority, guaranteeing the conditions under which such [equal] rights would be exercised. [Moreover] the integration of the German war potential into the European economy would enable it to be under constant supervision, and would eliminate the risk of its serving one day against Europe itself.

Another big problem is currency. It is conceded that no scheme of federation can succeed without federal currency that will replace the national currencies. The difficulty is how to work this out on a basis satisfactory to those nations, such as Switzerland, that still enjoy the blessings of a stable monetary system. The problem may require a solution as heroic and unpleasant as Alexander Hamilton's famous debt-funding operation.

One thing is certain: such problems cannot wait indefinitely for solution. For if federation of Europe is not achieved while the Marshall Plan is still in operation, it is not likely to be achieved at all.

AEC Fellowships

It was in the name of national security that Congress decided not long ago to require a loyalty investigation of all applicants for Atomic Energy Commission fellowships. But the effect of this quest for political purity in scientific study has been to diminish rather than to enhance security. The fellowship program for the coming academic year will be cut almost in half because the National Academy of Sciences, whose National Research Council administers the program, refuses any longer to participate in that phase of it which deals with scientists whose work has no relation whatever to atomic secrets.

The position of the National Academy is by no means to be dismissed as an obstructionist one. It is grounded upon a vital principle. "In our opinion," the council of the National Academy declared, "the requirement of FBI investigation and Atomic Energy Commission clearance is ill advised for those fellows who neither work on secret material nor are directly preparing for work on Atomic Energy Commission projects. We are convinced that by this restriction the value of the broad program has been greatly reduced; we have grave doubts whether the continuance of the Atomic Energy Commission fellowship program thus restricted is in the national interests."

The National Academy statement expressed the hope that "to the extent to which the Atomic Energy Commission continues the program, it will find it possible to administer it without our help." The AEC, for its part, very properly concluded that, while an executive agency of the Government may properly sponsor such a program, it would be extremely difficult to administer effectively without the full support of the scientific community. Accordingly, no new predoctoral fellowships will be offered and new post-doctoral fellowships will be offered only for advanced training in fields of research closely related to the national atomic energy program.

No one disputes the desirability of investigation and clearance so far as the latter category is concerned. But investigation and clearance of researchers having no access to classified material and no relation to the actual work of the AEC cannot be justified. It introduces the authority of the FBI into an area where it has no proper place. Research in the field of nuclear physics, which the AEC fellowship program was designed to foster, can be of tremendous value to American security. It should be carried on without unnecessary restraints.

Farm Crusade

At its Chicago convention the American Farm Bureau Federation seems to have devoted itself largely to squirting a full head of steam against the Brannan Plan. Farm Bureau antipathy toward Secretary Brannan has been mounting, not without simultaneous blasts from Mr. Brannan, and the antipathy culminated in a unanimous resolution scorching the Brannan farm program. While there is much logic in the Farm Bureau's view, the effect of so much cumulative denunciation is to place the bureau in an unfortunately negative position.

To be sure, the reelection of Allan Kline as president of the Farm Bureau is a vote for farm statesmanship. Mr. Kline is a man of broad caliber—one who is able, for example, to see beyond the mere price of cotton. He has shown a keen and progressive appreciation of the relationship of the farmer to the whole national economy, and he represents a large segment of the Nation's important agricultural producers.

Moreover, it is easy to agree with the fundamental objections to the Brannan Plan. This scheme most certainly would increase the farmer's direct dependence on the Government for his income. In facilitating lower market prices it would give the consumer a false idea of what he really was paying for his food. It would extend Government controls, and its costs would be unpredictable.

Nevertheless, the Brannan Plan does present a promise of lower food prices to the consumer, superficial as this promise may be when viewed against the hidden cost of income payments to farmers. By this means it also proposes to increase food consumption—certainly one means of combating surpluses. The appeal of this approach may be strengthened as the public becomes increasingly disgusted with the enormous cost and unsatisfactory performance of the present farm program.

Where the Farm Bureau is at fault is in not concentrating more of its attack on the root of the present trouble. The difficulty is that pressure groups have made captives of certain members of Congress, with the result that farm legislation has been well insulated against any real decline in prices. Senator Anderson did a valiant job of trying to adhere to the principle of flexible price supports, and the Anderson law is better than some of the alternatives might have been. But it contains a gimmick—a dual standard of parity—and it postpones operation of flexible supports. That leaves room for further tampering before they take effect.

To its great credit, the Farm Bureau has consistently backed a flexible farm program. But instead of wasting so much crusading zeal on the Brannan Plan, it might accomplish more by recognizing the surface appeal in the Brannan program and by centering its fire on the abuses which prevent the operation of a really workable farm plan.

Santa's Sub

Santa Claus has been banned from the Soviet zone of Germany, and Jack the Giant Killer and his cohorts are in danger of being liquidated in Communist lands. Though Santa, or Kris Kringle, or Father Christmas, as he is variously called, originated in Germany, he is now an exile. So is the Christmas tree. The organ of the Communist Party, Pravda, has assailed a children's magazine for publishing animal stories and fairy tales on the ground that they are "isolated from life." Youth, it says, should be acquainted with true and more thrilling tales of the "full, many-sided life of the Soviet state." This really puts Soviet writers to a big test. Aside from the problem of presenting life in the Soviet state as fairyland, there is the question of who is to fill in for the killer of giants, for Cinderella, for Prince Charming, the Good Fairy and all the other legendary figures that children for centuries have loved. And who especially is to double for Santa in Eastern Germany? We have a good tip and we'll tell you this much. He hasn't a beard, but he does have a big mustache.

CYRANO

Oh can we never win?
And must we always struggle
Against the ranks of ignorance and fear and hate?
It would be glorious to win one battle
And know that we, for once, were in the right.
It is in struggle only that our life is Yet shall we fight; defeat the prize we seek.

German Occupation

Since 1945 we have had a part in the occupation of Germany. Thoughtful Americans know that even without worsened relations with Russia the period of occupation must be long and expensive. If occupation costs 100 billions over the next 40 years, will it not be less expensive than a couple more wars, though they prove no more costly than the last two which together cost over 300 billions?

At the end of our Civil War, we waited over 10 years before restoring the vote to the men who had fought in the ranks of the Confederacy. Military officials and elected officials of the Confederacy were not allowed to again hold office until nearly 25 years after the close of the War Between the States. Yet the Confederacy was a relatively democratic, not autocratic government.

We talk a great deal about democracy at the grass roots. Why didn't we start that way in Germany? With the zone government in our hands we could have given the German people the right to elect school boards, mayors, city councils, and other minor local officials. Democratic labor unions would have been an innovation in Germany. Provincial legislation elected on short terms could have been added in a few years.

At the same time a real educational program should have been attempted. I don't know how much our industrialists spend annually on advertisement but the expenditure of a similar sum annually on the political education of the Germans would pay dividends.

Germany should not be rearmed within our life time. Friends of mine in Germany point out that under Hitler the standard of living of the individuals apparently suffered in order that foreign trade and the military program might be carried on. I believe that we owe it to our allies to develop their foreign trade first. The German worker and the German farmer will profit most by local improvements and prosperity. The less the German industrialists profit, the less chance there will be for another war.

Churches For Schools

The Washington Post recently reported that school authorities here are considering the use of churches to relieve overcrowding in the Congress Heights elementary schools.

The danger inherent in such makeshift arrangements is that here in the District they tend to become permanent instead of "temporary" expedients and become an obstacle to obtaining the new schools we desperately need now! This goes for the use of churches, temporary buildings, the proposal to transport children to schools outside of their community, et al.

The use of churches to relieve overcrowding cannot answer even the immediate need of children for more space. These are buildings within adequate sanitary and fire standards to fit the needs of a school. There is no play space. Rooms which were never intended for schoolrooms will be used to crowd classes. In the Congress Heights school there are about 600 children attending school part time. At best, the use of the three proposed churches would take care of about 100 children.

We are opposed to having children attend public schools in denominational buildings. Even if the utmost caution is observed to separate the normal functions of the church from the conduct of the school, the two are inevitably associated in the young child's mind.

In the very area where the use of churches is being considered, the Board of Education has asked the Commissioners for money only to purchase a site for a possible new elementary school. What is needed is the appropriation of money not for the purchase of a site, but for the immediate building of at least two more new schools.

Christmas Meaning

We have come again to the season when we greet one another with a hearty "Merry Christmas," when family gatherings and parties are in order, a time for making merry indeed!

But let us ever remember that the cause of our merriment is not a mythical Santa Claus but a real Jesus, Whose birthday we celebrate with gladness because "He was delivered for our offenses and raised again for our justification."

Internationalization

Although neither Israeli diplomats nor our commentators have mentioned it, the plan to "internationalize" Jerusalem has had its counterpart in proposals to "internationalize" American territory and to subject its inhabitants to outside controls. American statesmen have rejected such plans.

In fact, the indignant refusal of our founding fathers to submit to such a proposal delayed the end of the Revolutionary War. Here is the forgotten incident in our history: France, our aid and ally, wanted to include in our peace treaty with England a provision that an area in the new United States should be set apart for the Indians, and that this territory should be under the "protection" and supervision of Spain. French statesmen were told that Americans would never tolerate such outside interference.

Another proposal of foreign restrictions on American sovereignity arose in the treaty negotiations which ended our war with Mexico. That country had insisted that the Catholic clergy in the territory ceded to the United States should be excluded from American jurisdiction and remain subject to Mexican control. The Senate emphatically rejected this provision.

"USSR Bulletin"

Having, perhaps, been too much affected by the "special pleading" contained in Jefferson's Virginia Bill for Religious Liberty and Madison's Memorial and Remonstrance—to say nothing of the First Amendment to our Constitution—during the years when my education was still in the "formative stage," I cannot refrain from registering my concern over the concept of freedom of the press and academic freedom contained in your issue of December 12. I refer to the editorial "USSR Bulletin."

The Washington Post, broad-mindedly, would exclude from our high school libraries not only the Soviet Bulletin, but also the "one-sided" propaganda of manufacturers, trade unions, farm groups, political parties and "innumerable other special pleaders." "Students whose education is still in the formative stage," The Post says, "should not be encouraged to delve into books and pamphlets of this sort. Open-mindedness," it insists, "is the prime aim of an enlightened educational system. And paradoxical though it may seem, the attainment of that end requires careful supervision of school reading and elimination from school libraries of publications, regardless of their source or purpose, that substitute special pleading for a fair-minded presentation of facts and objective discussion of controversial issues."

Here is a paradox, indeed! Open-mindedness is to be obtained by closing the minds to all partisan discussions! The young Republican must not be exposed to the subversive influences of Democratic campaign propaganda until his educational processes has passed the "formative stage" and his mind has hardened in its Republicanism, and vice versa. The son of the labor union man must not be exposed to the blandishments of the management point of view until he has become firm in his faith in the infallibility of organized labor, and vice versa. But why go on? Gilbert and Sullivan said it much better—and to music, at that.

It is, of course, proper and desirable that the bodies of our high school students be toughened in the physical conflict of the football field, the basketball court and the baseball diamond, but their minds must be kept tender and protected from the toughening effect of any conflict of ideas. And if these tender minds are to be sheltered against all "special pleading" that might trickle down from the library shelves, we should certainly not permit the work of our school boards to be undone by allowing these same minds to be exposed to the "unsuitable fare" of a similar nature offered through radio, newspapers, comic books and other media of mass communication.

The Post, it is to be assumed, stands ready to advocate its own exclusion from all school libraries. In its editorial, it points out that the Soviet Information Bulletin "carries lengthy excerpts from Foreign Minister Vishinsky's vitriolic U. N. address attacking the United States atom control plan." As I recall, The Post was guilty of this very same offense. It even carried on the same page with its editorial an article by the Alsop brothers saying that a committee of scientists has "earnestly urged the desirability of a new look at the old problem of international control" of atomic energy.

There is no denying the fact The Post, is dangerous stuff for immature minds. Was any great cartoon ever drawn that was not "special pleading?" Was any great editorial ever written that was a mere "fair-minded presentation of facts?"

Is it the function of our schools to shelter their students from all strongly felt ideas and merely turn out their annual quota of sterilized minds? When does one pass the "formative stage" in education? Is The Post sure that it has not confused educational maturity with educational ossification?

And by the way, has The Post's editorial writer exchanged ideas with any high school students recently? If not, he might be surprised. He might also be frightened if he has passed the "formative stage" in his education. Ideas can scare the hell out of folks who are not used to them.

Indispensable Balance

By Andre Visson

Security and Freedom

THE outspoken 8000-word report by the Committee for Economic Development, made public that week, deals courageously with the most crucial problem of our time: How much national security we can have without endangering our liberties.

In the last decades our society has indeed developed an obsession with security. The clamor for security is particularly strong in western Europe. But it also is becoming very strong in the United States.

The excellent CED report deals with national security on the military level. But many of its passages can as well be applied to economic security on the social level. When, for instance, the report says: "Security bought at the cost of destroying our system of individual liberties would be self-defeating," the statement is equally true of national and social security.

The report does not contest the need for national security. Without adequate security there can be no freedom or personal liberty. But the report makes the very strong point that excessive security crushes the very liberties it is supposed to protect.

The same can be said about social security. No honest man can deny the need for social security in our modern society. But every honest man should recognize that excessive social security leads to the extinction of many—if not all—individual liberties our ancestors fought for and which we enjoy today as a heritage.

We take these liberties for granted. We believe that because our grandfathers and our fathers had them, we will necessarily have them too and transmit them intact to our children. Unfortunately this is not so. Nothing is more precarious than individual liberties. They are at least as precarious as our fortunes. We long ago became aware of the "from shirtsleeves to shirtsleeves" cycle. We should become aware of the greater and so much more dangerous "from slave to slave" cycle.

WE SHOULD also become aware of the curious and generally unsuspected parallelism of military and Socialist philosophies. We have grown up with a number of "fixed," and therefore accepted ideas. One is that military leaders, whose political philosophy is usually right-of-center or, at least, middle-of-the-road, are our natural and best protectors against Marxist adventures, whether of Communist totalitarian or of Socialist democratic-authoritarian brand. Another fixed idea we have grown up with is that Socialists are necessarily internationalist, that they are well meaning, even though impractical idealists and therefore the natural and best protectors of individual liberties against militarist encroachments.

The truth is that both military and Socialist leaders—the first in the name of national security, the latter in the name of social security — are inevitably bound to throttle our individual liberties.

The Communist experiments in Russia and in Soviet satellite countries have revealed with inexorable obviousness that the absolute Soviet-style social security brings with it the absolute extinction of individual liberties. The Socialist experiments in New Zealand, Australia and Great Britain reveal that a Socialist-style social security brings with it a painful curtailment of individual libertes. The New Zealanders and Australians who have just voted out their respective 14-year and 8-year old Socialist governments did not vote against social security. They voted against the high price in individual liberties they were being asked to pay for their Socialist-type social security.

Military and Socialist leaders have the common conviction that their respective objectives are of such paramount importance that the cost of their experiments is secondary. Both think in terms of planned economy. And their thinking cannot help having an authoritarian trend. They have in common a we-know-better-than-you-what is good for you attitude. Furthermore, the needs of modern warfare impose upon the army of today a Socialist-type pattern, with uniformity as the keynote.

To be sure, there has been little love lost between the military and the Socialists. But in Germany, where the military were dominant, there was among certain high officers a curious interest in the socialistic conception of a modern state. This can be found in the correspondence between Otto von Bismark, Germany's iron chancellor, and the German Socialist, Ferdinand Lasalle.

There is, however, one fundamental difference between the military and the Socialists. Many nations have become strong without Socialists. None can do without the military. But while the military are indispensable, they must not be permitted, as pointed out by the CED report, to acquire a dominant position in modern society.

This can be prevented only through the system of checks and balances which has functioned so admirably in this country. And it is indeed in the spirit of this American system that the CED made its recommendation for a strong and independent civilian staff to appraise this country's defense policy.

The Washington Merry-Go-Round

Abs' Visit Is History Repeating

By Drew Pearson

THERE slipped quietly into New York last month one of the German bankers who helped Hitler build up Nazi armament and financed the Nazis' rabid grab for power.

Herman J. Abs, the industrial warlord who walked down the gangplank of the Ile de France November 16, has been branded by United States officials as one of the worst economic influences under Hitler. But despite this fact, he registered at the Plaza Hotel in New York and has quietly gone about the business of raising money for the German steel industry.

Abs' visit to the United States indicates how drastically American policy toward Germany has changed. Only a little over a year ago the State Department under General Marshall was flatly opposed to Abs, and United States Ambassador Robert Murphy sent a secret cable in the spring of 1948 advising that Abs be barred from the new trizonal bank of the German states.

"Although Abs apparently never was an NSDAP (Nazi) member," warned Murphy, "he cooperated hand in glove during the Third Reich . . . and took an important role in imperialistic expansion of Deutsche Bank following Nazi political and military absorption."

General Clay's finance division also branded Abs' Deutsche Bank with "excessive concentration of economic power and the participation in the execution of the criminal policies of the Nazi regime."

Another War Department report in March, 1945, branded Abs as among the German financiers who "in an outstanding way thrived under National Socialism, welcomed it in the beginning, aided the Nazis to obtain power, supported them in office, shared the spoils of expropriation and conquest or otherwise markedly benefited in their careers or fortunes under the Nazis."

In May, 1948, when Abs was nominated for the presidency of the new trizonal bank, State Department opposition was so strong that he was forced to retire.

Now American policy has gone into reverse.

Most significant thing about Abs' arrival in New York is in connection with the rebuilding of the German steel industry. After World War I, Dillon, Read & Co., which did so much to finance German rearmament and some of whose officials later dictated United States foreign policy, loaned 125 million dollars to Germany's Vereinigte Stahlwerke (United Steel Works).

Not one penny of this was ever paid back. American investors, many of them widows and small beneficiaries of trusts, were left holding the bag. Furthermore, it was United States financed expansion of German steel that put Hitler in a position to start World War II. Without steel, Germany is powerless.

Now history appears to be repeating all over again.

Last month—November 14—Chancellor Konrad Adenauer of the new West German state sent a secret memo to the Allied high commissioners asking for 300 million marks to rebuild this same Vereinigte Stahlwerke which has never repaid the 125 million dollars to Dillon, Reed. Most of the 300 million marks Adenauer wants is to come from the United States.

And it's to explore the possibility of raising this money that Dr. Abs quietly arrived in the United States on November 16, two days after the Adenauer memo.

Tito Aids De Gasperi

MARSHALL TITO, who once almost went to war with Italy over Trieste, is now helping the De Gasperi government in Rome. He has secretly dispatched 200 of his top followers to Italy with orders to raid the Italian Communist Party and spread Titoism in its ranks.

As a result, these secret Tito agents are tearing the heart out of Togliatti's Italian Communist Party. The Yugoslavs are having heart-to-heart talks with Italian Communists, telling them the inside facts about the way the Cominform tried to destroy Yugoslavia when it was still a satellite nation, and warning the Italian Communists that if Italy ever becomes a Communist nation under Moscow's auspices, the Italian Communists will be nothing but slaves of the Kremlin.

Results: Moscow is scared stiff. The American Embassy is delighted. It is the worst blow communism has received in Italy since the Friendship Train.

Fulton Oursler's Modern Parables

Clever Stepfather

DEAR Friends and Gentle Hearts:

The other day a businessman resigned from a famous Virginia club after 20 years on its roster.

"During my entire membership," he told me bitterly, "I felt unwanted. The only real friend I had in the whole place was the bartender, and he was hired to be nice to everybody. If I happened to join a group in the grill room, it soon broke up. The only way I could be sure of someone to talk to was to bring a guest. Even then, it was embarrassing because so few members greeted me; no one called me by my first name. For a fifth of a century I paid dues to that club—but I never really belonged."

What went wrong? This man, of course, blamed the other club members, and not himself. Perhaps the exile was self-conscious and scared people off. But that is not a good excuse; according to a friend of mine, a retired psychoneurologist, shyness is a paralysis that comes from an exaggerated sense of our own importance.

"Why are you shy?" he would ask. "Because of your egotism, you are afraid you will not be welcomed; you will be snubbed; you will not be able to hold your own in conversation; you will not make the right appearance or impression. Who cares about all that, except you? Nobody else is thinking about you. Shyness is an obnoxious form of vanity."

My friend, the psychologist, also declared that any person can gain friends if he is willing to pay the price, which is high at the beginning but yields dividends for the rest of life. It means learning to take a real—and not a hypocritical—interest in others.

LIKE a dentist I knew who married a widow with a beautiful daughter. The young woman—already a mild success in a Broadway play—took an instant dislike to her mother's new husband. At mealtime she would look only at mamma, talking theater; she froze out the poor stepfather completely. Unless the dentist could win over this arrogant girl, his marriage might smash up.

"I had to do something specific and immediate," he told me.

First, he called on an old theatrical acquaintance, the late Sam H. Harris, and asked for help. Following suggestions of that famous show producer, he went back to school, registering in Columbia University for night courses in the drama. Next he subscribed to the theatrical weekly Variety and the daily Hollywood Reporter.

This earnest fellow was not merely "boning" up; he was getting a thorough understanding of the drama, the history of the theater, the personalities of the current stage, the news and gossip of the Rialto, even its trivia and wisecracks. With that knowledge, he was determined to make himself helpful to his young enemy.

Finally, one evening at dinner, the girl in her shop-talk showed him that she was misinformed.

"I am afraid, dear," the stepfather interposed, "that Kit Cornell is going to do that show, not Katie Hepburn. At least, Variety reports that Kit has already taken an option on the script."

What did he think he knew about show business? Why, he told her, he had many patients in "the profession"; he was just as familiar with Cornell's canines as with Hepburn's biscupids! (Which was true; he was not familiar with either.)

What really mattered to the girl was that this despised, earthbound stepfather was revealing an intelligent and excited interest in her work; that he was full of sympathy, encouragement and genuine knowledge.

The dentist told me the outcome, holding his wife's hand, as we sailed together one night on a steamer to Hollywood, where daughter had reached stardom. She had sent for her folks simply because she couldn't feel comfortable without stepfather's expert counsel.

TROUBLE? Yes. You have to go to trouble to make yourself liked, and even then, not everyone will like you. But that's no reason for retreating into the gloom of a lonely mind. We must figure out what to do and then—do it!

"Dare to be wise," said Horace. "Begin! He who postpones the hour of living rightly is like the rustic who waits for the river to run out before he crosses. Yet on it glides and will glide on forever!"

And, to Horace, I dare to add one comment more:

If the three words: "I! Me! Myself!" are often in my mouth, they will soon get in other people's hair. But if I can eject those villains and substitute: "You! Yourself!"—and really care about the other fellow—I summon up a host of comrades. This ancient and most neglected remedy often makes the difference between receiving a slap in the face and a pat on the back.

Matter of Fact

Road to Prague a Fearsome One

By Joseph and Stewart Alsop

IT IS, fortunately, not possible to peer into men's minds. If it were, it would be an interesting, if perhaps rather harrowing, experience to peer into the mind of Czech Foreign Minister Vlado Klementis, who some days ago took ship from New York, bound for Prague.

Klementis has been attending the United Nations meeting in New York, where he was pictured wreathed in smiles, walking arm in arm with Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Vishinsky. Even when this picture was taken, Klementis had received friendly warnings from Prague. He was warned that his—and Vishinsky's—masters were preparing for him the same fate which has now been meted out to Bulgarian Communist Leader Traicho Kostov and a host of others.

As this is written, Klementis has reached Paris, on his way home. It is impossible to imagine what thoughts are going on behind the bland exterior he presents to the world. Yet it seems highly probable that the same thought has occurred to him as occurred some time ago to his former second-in-command, Secretary General of the Czech Foreign Office Arnost Heydrich.

His Only Alternative

NOT LONG after the Communists seized full power in Prague, one of these correspondents interviewed Heydrich at the Czech Foreign Office. Heydrich was surprisingly affable and outspoken for a high official in a Communist state. Toward the end of the interview he suddenly asked his interviewer what the chances were of war in the near future between the Soviet Union and the United States. The reply was that on the whole, war seemed unlikely.

"Alas," Heydrich blurted out, "in that case there is nothing left to do but escape."

This extraordinary remark—it was as though Undersecretary of State James Webb had told a strange Tass correspondent that war with the Soviet Union was his only hope of liberation—can only now be reported because Heydrich was as good as his word. Some months ago he slipped across the Czech border and he is now in the United States.

The reasons why the thought of escape may logically be supposed to have occurred also to Klementis may be briefly listed. First, there are the secret warnings which have come from Prague. Second, there is the fact that a number of Klementis' closest associates and appointees, like Klinger, chief of the Czech Foreign Office press section, were purged while Klementis was in New York. And third, there is the damaging record of Klementis' past.

ON A number of occasions in the past, Klementis has defied the Kremlin—and this is not something the Kremlin quickly forgets. In 1939, when the Nazis gobbled up Czechoslovakia, Klementis escaped to Paris. Then came the Nazi-Soviet pact and war. The Kremlin ordered Klementis, a lifelong Communist, to Moscow. Instead, Klementis went to London.

In London, he compounded the unforgivable. He broadcast for the Benes-Masaryk government in exile and his broadcasts were openly critical of the Nazi-Soviet pact and later of the Russian attack on Finland. Moreover, throughout the period of the pact, Klementis proved himself a premature anti-Fascist by calling in his broadcasts for maximum resistance to the Nazis, flatly contradicting the Soviet-Communist line.

When the Nazis attacked the Soviet Union, Klementis' deviations ended and he was apparently accepted back into the Kremlin's good graces. Yet another black mark was entered against him in 1947, when the Czech government, of which he was a part, publicly accepted the offer of Marshall aid without consulting its masters in the Kremlin. As a result, the Czech leaders were called to Moscow and curtly disciplined.

Gottwald a 'Hostage'

IN VIEW of all this, Klementis must be fully aware that the kind of independence he has frequently displayed has no place in the Kremlin's new order. He must, therefore, know that there is an excellent chance that the warnings are accurate and that in Prague, the familiar sequence of arrest, delicate persuasion, abject confession, trial and execution awaits him sooner or later.

It is just possible that Klementis may yet accept Marshal Tito's offer of asylum to Communists in his position and end up in Belgrade instead of in Prague, particularly as he is accompanied by his wife. Yet his former subordinate, Heydrich, who has known him well, does not believe this likely.

In the first place, Klementis is an old friend and associate of Czech President Klement Gottwald and if he failed to return he would thus almost certainly destroy Gottwald. In the second place, he has a certain courage and independence of spirit, as his past defiance of the Kremlin has shown. But however courageous, it is hardly possible that he is not afraid. And as the long contest between the free and the slave states drags on, it is at least worth remembering that the loud and angry voices from the East are, almost without exception, the voices of men who are afraid.

Looking at the South

Our Bored Scholars

By Hodding Carter

GREENVILLE, Miss.—This is sort of a father's eye view of some weaknesses in the public school system, with especial attention to the secondary schools of the South.

My oldest son is now in his first year at a private preparatory school which is considerably more concerned with scholarship than are most schools today. We were a little worried about sending him so far away, but my son, who is no prodigy but simply an intelligent youngster, said that he was having too easy a time in junior high school and we wanted him to find out how to study.

Up to this fall, he had an A average throughout grammar school and junior high, except in conduct. He may have brought some books home now and then during those years, but I don't remember seeing them. He did his studying during school hours, in remarkably record time, and spent his evenings as a more or less free agent, scholastically speaking. His marks were invariably good and he had ample time for the dramatic club, football and basketball practice and the school's social events that he began last year to find interesting.

And, in all honestry, there were times he was bored.

He isn't bored any more. His first four months away at school have been good for his soul if not his ego. He has worked desperately hard, studying until lights out and getting up early to grind away again. He's a little perplexed about what has happened to him. He's passing everything and has managed one A and a B, but he has also produced some low C's and a D, and he's a little ashamed of himself.

Significantly, his low grades are in those subjects requiring the most mental discipline, Latin and math. He never had any such discipline before. One of his former teachers at home says that overly simple textbooks in the public schools are the reason. He himself says that no one demanded any real performance from him before.

My opinion is that these two factors are contributory but that the basic reason for the great gap between public school and the better preparatory school training is that the public schools haven't decided whom they are educating for what, and resultantly are educating too many too loosely.

Moreover, they no longer seem to be emphasizing basic study even to the extent that it was emphasized in the small high school which I attended in Louisiana a long time ago. Instead, great emphasis is placed on educational sidelines, important, instructive and entertaining in themselves, but not calculated to provide the groundwork for higher education—or even well-rounded secondary education.

I daresay that any sizable Mississippi high school has a better band, a better football team, a bigger school paper and gayer social events than does the school my son now attends. And these adjuncts are fine. But they aren't substitutes for the needful thing that is lacking.

What has happened is that in broadening the base of public education we have blunted its apex. The emphasis is on the great common denominator, which is as it should be. But the problem is how to direct young minds that cannot get what they need under a make-it-easy system.

Our Political Economy

Automatic Regulators for Wages

By Ysabel and Robert Rennie

WITH the steel and auto settlements safely behind us, and coal wages still hanging in the balance, the American people have shown an increasing concern for the problem of a "fair" wage.

When giant labor faces giant industry, some settlement is arrived at. But it is a settlement which may cause hardship to the consumer, and which seems to bear little discernible relation to economic laws. The pattern has been for a single mass union to win a wage or pension increase, and for all other unions to demand the same benefits. If John L. Lewis gets a pension for his miners, Phil Murray wants a pension for his men. Or if Murray wins a wage hike, Reuther cannot afford to take less.

Many Americans are wondering whether "me, too," is an adequate philosophy on which to base a national wage pattern. Few observers would say that it is. But is there a real alternative, and if so, what is it?

Over the last decade there have been three suggestions for automatic wage regulation. One is the guaranteed annual wage, whose mysterious workings no one has adequately explained. Another is the proposal to tie wages to cost of living. This is acceptable to labor when prices are rising, but most inacceptable when they are falling.

A third proposal, which is being studied both in Washington and London, is to tie wages to productivity—that is, to the rising output of goods per man-hour of labor. This is a proposal which you may hear more of in the future.

Wild Fluctuations

OVER the last century American productivity has risen about 2 percent a year. This is an average figure. There have been wild fluctuations from one year to another. Between 1919 and 1948, for example, man-hour output dropped 7 percent in one year and rose 15 percent in another.

Increasing productivity is the result of additional capital, inventions and new techniques. Though machines are provided by the investor and new techniques are generally devised by the managament, the benefits resulting from both have been shared by labor. Over a 100-year span, wages have risen just about as much as productivity.

Again, this is an over-all figure. In individual years there have been marked disparities. In 1931, for instance, man-hour output rose 4.4 percent while wages dropped 6.7 percent. In 1942, on the other hand, productivity rose 2.4 percent and average hourly earnings rose 17 percent. During depressions, wages tend to lag behind productivity, and during booms, to run ahead of it, averaging out over the long run.

Certain economists have suggested that a fair yardstick for measuring wage demands is the increase in productivity during the year. The figure used should be a national average; but workers in declining industries may be granted somewhat less than the average figure, and in growing industries, somewhat more.

Let us see how this would work out in practice. In depressions, productivity may rise, yet because of shrinking markets, employers may be in no position to pay higher wages. Similarly, in booms the cost of living may get so far out of hand—as it does after every war—that a mere productivity increase would in no way satisfy labor's demands. And if productivity should actually drop, as it did in 1946 and 1947, would workers be willing to take a cut in wages? The answer, obviously, is no.

Classic and Modern

THEREFORE we must reluctantly conclude that even this automatic adjustor would not work in practice. That brings us back where we started, with no easy solution in sight.

Classical theory favored completely flexible wages—high in good times, low in bad. It was believed that if the price of labor went down during depressions, this would make it possible for the employer to sell at lower prices and adjust himself quickly to the market. The theory was that the economy would then quickly return to full production without mass unemployment.

Modern labor economists take the opposite viewpoint. They claim that wages should be raised in recession in order to increase purchasing power and make possible a return to full production.

Each argument has certain plausibility; but the first takes too little account of purchasing power, and the second takes too little account of costs. John Maynard Keynes, the British economist, believed that wage rates had no significant effect; higher wages canceled out in higher prices, and lower wages canceled out in lower purchasing power.

Wages are not the primary determinant of booms and busts. It is the level of investment which largely decides our prosperity, and this in turn depends on the expectations of businessmen. Wages are by no means the most important consideration in their investment plans.

This brings us back to productivity. If an employer knew in advance that a costly labor-saving machine would result in immediate wage rises to his employes without any great increase in profit to himself, he would simply not bother to install it.

What happens today is that there is a time lag between the two effects. The investor installs a machine. He enjoys a brief increase in profit. His labor uses his profit as an argument for further wage rises. He is right back where he started from, and once again he looks for a new device to raise productivity.

This perpetual treadmill to keep ahead of labor costs may be the real reason for our rising productivity. It used to be thought that it was the pressure of competition with other producers which forced innovations. The truth today may be very different.

Perhaps what makes American producers ever more efficient and more productive is competition, not with other producers, but with the insatiable demands of their own labor.

Gallup Poll

White Collar Group Leans To the GOP

By George Gallup

Director, American Institute of Public Opinion.

REPUBLICAN strategy committees working on campaign plans for 1950 could very well focus attention on one problem. That is the need for the Republican Party to "sell" a larger bloc of voters on the idea that their own interests are best represented by the Republicans.

This job has already been done in the group comprising business and professional people and there is evidence that the Republicans have also made substantial progress among white-collar or office workers. This latter group, by a small margin, today says that the Republican Party represents its interests best.

But in the case of skilled and unskilled workers and farmers, the Democratic Party holds a very substantial advantage at present.

The Institute asked a cross-section of voters the following question:

"As you feel today, which political party, the Republican or Democratic, do you think serves the interests of the following groups best?"

The groups listed were: Farmers, business owners and professional people, skilled workers, such as carpenters, plumbers, electricians; unskilled workers, such as manual laborers, and white-collar workers or office workers.

After voting on that question, each person was asked:

"In which of these occupational groups would you place yourself?"

The following tables show the vote for each group by persons who place themselves into that particular occupational group:

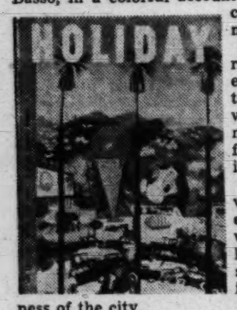
AMONG other things, Los Angeles has been called (perhaps by its Chamber of Commerce) the City of Magnificent Distances. Hamilton Basso, in a colorful account in Holiday, makes it clear that this claim is not a myth.



For example, if you rode a taxi from one end of Los Angeles to the other, the ride would be more than 57 miles long and the fare close to $15. Imagine if you had to walk!

Ernest Kleinberg, who supplied the excellent photographs with the article, has lived in Los Angeles seven years but is still impressed by the bigness of the city.

"I traveled over 3500 miles on this story—3200 of them within the city limits," he says.

The city's living space sprawls over 452 square miles, 87 square miles more than New York, its nearest rival. It is a city more than one third the size of the State of Rhode Island.

Los Angeles has an estimated population of 1,956,397, which places it in a neck-and-neck race with Philadelphia for the position of third largest city in the United States.

Because of the immense distances, an automobile is practically a must to a resident of Los Angeles. In 1948, its automobile registration reached an all-time high of 1,342,812—just about two autos for every three residents.

Despite its smog and traffic problems and its still inadequate housing, Basso has some nice things to say about the oft-libeled California metropolis. He suggests that in Los Angeles there is being created "the most American of all American cities."

Los Angeles is peopled largely by American-born stock, a good part of which drifted there from the Midwest. One pioneer who moved to Los Angeles from Nebraska in 1889 says, in describing the charms of southern California:

"It wasn't easy to pick up and come out here—the farm to sell, the house to break up, and leaving a place where your people were among the first settlers—but it was worth it. Just the flowers and orange trees were worth it; just the greenery all around; just knowing that you could go to the outhouse if you wanted to and not come back with a case of pneumonia."

THE REPORTER turns briefly from politics and economics to portray a gallery of American cities and the streets which characterize them.

TAXES, ever an important subject, get an examination in United States News & World Report. The outlook is for some sort of a cut in excise taxes and certainly no increase in income tax. Congress is in more of a mood to cut taxes than raise them despite presidential wishes, United States News declared.

United States News offers an interesting possibility for 1952—that General Eisenhower is being studied as a coalition candidate to unite anti-Administration voters in the next Presidential election. The strategy: Eisenhower would be nominated by both the Republicans and the States' Rights Democrats.

EBONY, the Negro picture magazine, which may be guilty of too much sensationalizing on occasion with such as "The Most Married Negroes in the United States," etc., marks one on the credit side of the ledger with an article on Ralph Bunche who, the magazine says, has been called "the world's outstanding Negro" by the New York Times.

Of Bunche, who holds 23 honorary degrees from American colleges, Ebony says:

"Bunche's colleagues in the U. N. say there is no one in the organization who is more symbolic of its worldly peace ideals. As American as baseball . . . Bunche has been able to submerge his love of native land in the great principles guiding the U. N. . . ."

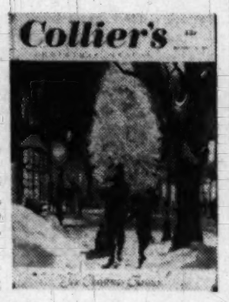
COLLIER'S Christmas Annual is as Christmasy as a Yule log. Up front is a portfolio of 10 Christmas classics, the reading of which should add to your holiday spirit.

Several of the classics, such as "Christmas Every Day" by William Dean Howells and "The Little Match Girl" by Hans Christian Andersen, you will want to read to your children.



For the adult taste there are "Christmas Trees" by Robert Frost, "How Come Christmas?" by Roark Bradford, and "How Santa Claus Came to Simpson's Bar" by Bret Harte.

In its regular format, Collier's has an article, "Year of Jubilee," which describes the ritual which will take place Christmas Eve in Rome when Pope Pius XII signals the beginning of the Holy Year, 1950—the twenty-fifth such Holy Year in a 650-year-old tradition of the Roman Catholic Church.

John Conner, former District resident and now an associate editor of Collier's, describes how an Air Force chaplain flies over 4500 miles of frozen wasteland to drop Christmas gifts, dinners and holiday trees to American airmen at fields all the way from the Azores to the Arctic Circle.

BEFORE we leave the subject of Christmas, let it be noted that the American Home is fat with suggestions on how to add that smart Christmas touch to your home. One of the neatest ideas is to run a few ribbons across your front door to make it look like a big gift package.

SIMPLE living item: Newsweek reports that television has turned Lana Turner and her husband, Bob Topping, into homebodies. They have five television sets. "This is the good life," sighs Lana.

And on the subject of television, Fred Allen is quoted in Newsweek: "Everything is for the eye these days—Life, Look, the picture business. Nothing is for the mind. The next generation will have eyeballs as big as cantaloupes and no brain at all."

BOOKS

Some of the map maker's tools used in the preparation of the new Rand McNally "Cosmopolitan Atlas" ($12.50). They include spacing dividers, slide rule, protractor, steamship curve, drafting instruments (with French curve), triangular scale, straight edge, beam compass and triangle. More than 125,000 hours of work went into the atlas.

Notes on the Margin

By Lee Grove

WASHINGTON booksellers have a runaway on their hands in "Mr. Jones, Meet the Master," by the late Rev. Dr. Peter Marshall, former United States Senate Chaplain and Pastor of New York Avenue Presbyterian Church.

On publication day, November 28, booksellers here sold 3000 copies.

This is believed to be the Washington record for first-day sales of a religious book—and perhaps for any book, being greater than the first-day sale of those secular titles, Corrigan's "One Way Passage," and the first volume of Freeman's "Lee's Lieutenants"—according to Mrs. Gladys Bowling of Pursell's Book Store, which shop accounted for half or more of the first-day sale of "Mr. Jones."

Copies of the book are still being sold like the proverbial hotcakes, not only in Washington but in Baltimore, Richmond and Atlanta. By Friday the publisher, Fleming H. Revell Co. of New York, will have in print 60,000 copies of the book, which had relatively little advance promotion.

Utopian Adventure

DAOMA WINSTON, wife of Physicist Murray Strasberg, of 4911 W st. nw., has sold the Canadian rights to a novel tentatively called, "In Adam's County," to Export Publishing Enterprises, a Toronto publisher of pocket books. Her first novel, it is an adventure story about an isolated utopian community and a girl who wandered into it.

Meanwhile, Mrs. Winston, who was graduated from George Washington University in 1946 and later took graduate work there, is finishing another novel involving an immature girl fumbling in an unsatisfactory marriage.

Mrs. Winston also has a book of poems, "Doubtful Mercy," coming from Decker Press sometime in the next few weeks.

Another who has a book of verse coming from Decker Press shortly is Eric Georg Olson, of 1215 16th st. nw. It is titled, "The Troubadour." Olson's preceding book was "New Gold on the Stars," published last year.

From London comes word that Cyril Connolly's little but important monthly journal, Horizon, is concluding publication. Said Connolly, with undue pessimism: "A decade of our lives is quite enough to devote to a lost cause, such as the pursuit and marketing of quality in contemporary writing. In the end, despite all the good will in the world, the public gets the magazine it deserves."

Looking Homeward

ELLIS CREDLE, Washington author-illustrator in absentia, has a new book out for junior readers. It is "Here Comes the Showboat!" published by Nelson, a Junior Literary Guild selection.

Mrs. Credle, who with her husband, Charles Townsend, former National Gallery of Art photographer, went to Mexico some two years ago, writes that they will probably return to their home at 3615 Oval dr., Alexandria, within a year or two. They are living at Zapopan, Jalisco.

Lovely Ghosts

CLARENCE JOHN LAUGHLIN, the New Orleans photographer who lived in Washington for several years while in the Signal Corps and OSS during the war, was in town recently to lecture at the Phillips Memorial Gallery.

In 1949 Laughlin did a book of photographs of the Vieux Carre, "New Orleans and Its Living Past," and he worked with Scribner's famous editor, the late Maxwell Perkins, in preparing a book of 100 photographs of the stately homes of old Louisiana published in 1948. The book, "Ghosts Along the Mississippi," will be a collector's item one of these days because of the poetic beauty of Laughlin's photographs.

Laughlin would like now to do a similar book on the ironwork of the Mississippi Delta, but the production costs of such books are so high that he doesn't know if he will carry out the project.

Lysenko the Executioner

An Autopsy on Russian Science

By N. S. Haseltine

DEATH OF A SCIENCE IN RUSSIA. Edited by Conway Zirkle. University of Pennsylvania. 320 pp. $3.75.

EARLY in 1868, Russian scientists got together and organized that country's first major scientific societies. Until then, Russian scientific thought was sneered at in the science centers of France, England and the United States.

Dmitri Ivanovitch Mendeleyev, who formulated the Periodic Table, still a basic factor in chemistry, first unlocked the doors of Russia's great natural resources. Perhaps more importantly, he unlocked Russia to science.

Today's historians, pressed for a birthdate of Russian science, place it in 1868.

Today, unfortunately, they can also give the death date of Russian science, July, 1948.

Lysenko and the State

CONWAY ZIRKLE, professor of botany at the University of Pennsylvania, performs the autopsy in his "Death of a Science in Russia." His witnesses are those who saw and heard what was happening to the science of genetics in Russia from 1936 to July, 1948.

Trofim D. Lysenko, who had gained eminence in his own country by doing what American farmers had done long before—shorten the growing periods of wheat—dealt genetics its death blow in Russia. Charlatan Lysenko, backed up by the socialist state, virtually decreed a new, unscientific science of genetics.

With "proof" confusing only the untrained mind, Lysenko sneered aside the scientifically sound bases of the laws of heredity to replace them with his own theories of the science of acquired characteristics. It wasn't even a battle of theories. It was a degrading exhibition of "might makes right," and the might of a totalitarian state was behind Lysenko.

Zirkle tells how this could and did happen, and he tells what he's been able to find out of the fate of those Russian scientists who opposed Lysenko, much of which has already appeared in the American newspapers. His book is important not only because it is an honest accounting, but because it reduces the issues to lay understanding.

Back to Savagery

"THE CLIMAX of tragedy," writes Zirkle, "is reached in the recantations of the scientists and in abject and fawning letters written by the Russian scientific academies to Stalin. When we read these degrading documents it would be well to remember that they were written in 1948 and addressed to the head of a great state; they were not written a thousand years ago and sent to the chieftain of some savage tribe."

"Science can be obliterated for a time in a particular region," the author states, "but if it can remain free somewhere in the world its final triumph is assured."

It's too bad "Death of a Science in Russia" will not enjoy free circulation among the true scientists behind the Iron Curtain. It can be hoped that it will get wide reading among scientists in this country, particularly those few who show the unhealthy Red tinge. For, as Botanist Zirkle writes:

"There is now no excuse for ignorance as to how scientists are treated by the Communists."

A Naturalist Exudes Some Maple Syrup

AMERICAN HEARTWOOD. By Donald Culross Peattie. Houghton Mifflin. 307 pp. $3.50.

THE informed reader will view with angry astonishment the first sentence in this book, which purports to be a monograph on American timber, both human and sylvan.

Says Donald Culrose Peattie, "About the trees of his country, I believe that every American is a patriot."

Sarcasm? Not at all! For the next 290 pages this alleged conservationist sings his slightly shrill lyric to the noble trees and the noble explorers and the noble pioneers with their flashing axes, and the "ever resourceful" lumber barons who ask "only to be allowed to serve you, free of interference from unions and Federal encroachment." Even Peattie has enough sense to modify this outrageous remark in his next sentence.

But, alas, none of his misstatements is an isolated perversion of the truth.

True, Peattie has inserted a few apologetic sentences which indicate that he knows the shocking truth but hates to tell it. True, also, his final chapter gives a faint glimpse of the rapine which continues under our very eyes, plus a mild little pat on the back for our Forest Service and National Park Service, which are fighting a valiant, uphill battle to save a very modest percentage of the national wood lot.

But where are the ringing words that should come from a naturalist and conservationist of Peattie's supposed stature? Where the marshalled facts and stinging invective which might have let our children and our children's children enjoy the once magnificent forests and lumber resources about which Mr. Peattie writes such sentimental prose?

If Americans have the sturdy "heartwood" which Peattie is never tired of ascribing to them, they do not need the pap, sap and soothing syrup which he ladles out in such large, nauseating doses.

If you want to know what is really happening to our gravely endangered forests, read "Our Plundered Planet," by Fairfield Osborn, "Road to Survival," by William Vogt, and the slightly outdated, but still deeply significant, "Rich Land, Poor Land," by Stuart Chase.

Taken as a whole, this is an inexcusable book coming from a man who knows as much about the American sylva as Peattie should after all his years of study. It will have the unfortunate general effect of making Americans even more complacent than they already are about our imperiled forests.—S. N.

In a Nutshell

THE HOUSE OF CERTAIN DEATH. By Albert Cossery. Translated by Stuart B. Kaiser. New Directions. $1.50.

THE house, crumbling in the Alley of the Seven Daughters in an unnamed Egyptian city, is owned by Si Khalil. The tenants—the street cleaner, the monkey trainer, the melon peddler, the hashish addict and their families—are too degraded by poverty to join in effective protest against the hated landlord. In the awakening of one man's mind, however, the author, an Egyptian novelist writing in French, sees hope for the eventual rising of the oppressed masses to assert their rights. Regrettably, the story loses its inherent power through consistently emotional overwriting; and the translation, unfortunately, sounds like one.

SINNERS COME AWAY. By Leon Wilson. Atlantic-Little Brown. $3.

THIS first novel will not please those who like the sweet and refined in their reading. It is vivid and sometimes brutal description of life in a Tennessee county jail. The citizen criminals, as they call themselves, range from the weekend drunk to the unrepentant younger men whose main thought is sex. Wilson does not moralize, and his writing is not polished, but neither are his characters. There is a feeling that his first draft of this novel was the final one. But his excellent and often humorous descriptions make up for a slight mixup in pronouns and an overdose of dirty expletives.

THE INSIDE STORY OF UNRRA. By Marvin Klemme. Lifetime Editions. $3.

MARVIN KLEMME, forester and grass-roots sage, joined up with UNRRA more or less accidentally and to test his suspicions of internationalism. Considering his intense prejudices, about which he makes no bones, UNRRA'S work with displaced persons stacks up pretty well. Of course UNRRA was inefficient by any normal American standards of organization and administration. Klemme's contribution in setting up the forestry program in the British zone, and some of the rest of his own evidence, tends to refute his broadly derogatory statements about the emergency agency. The book is written from diary notes, only loosely organized and little edited.

Rhymed Melodrama

RUSSELL JANNEY, author of "The Miracle of the Bells," which has sold 750,000 copies, and a member of the jury which convicted the 11 Communists, turns poet of sorts in "The Vision of Red O'Shea" a melodrama in rhyme (Coward-McCann) . . . W. E. Woodward, who has just celebrated his seventy-fifth birthday, is hard at work on a book which he says will prove that the Civil War was "utterly foolish and unnecessary." He will call it, "When We Went Crazy."

5 Selected Reminders

Freedom as Utility, Not Luxury

By Alan Barth

RIMER OF INTELLECTUAL FREEDOM. Edited by Howard Mumford Jones. Harvard. 191 pp. $2.75.

T A TIME when the right to advocate odious or unpopular opinions is threatened in the me of national security, there is peculiar need remember the importance, and the utility, of e tradition of tolerance. Howard Mumford nes, professor of English at Harvard University d president of the American Academy of Arts d Sciences, has presented 15 reminders culled scriminatingly from the immediate and the re-ote past.

These statements defending liberty of expres-on, range from a defense of Prof. Dirk Struik ade this year by President James Rhyne Killian f the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, back Francis Bacon's "Advancement of Learning" in 605. They provide powerful ammunition for ose who wish to oppose censorship, repression nd the punishment of Americans for political eterodoxy.

Professor Jones' selection does not pretend to e exhaustive. Happily, many another volume ould be compiled containing eloquent and persuasive statements of the case for intellectual freedom by great and respected liberal thinkers. One can reproach the anthologist of this little book, if one likes, because he omitted Justice Brandeis' magnificient opinion in the Whitney case, or because he included nothing of Voltaire, or Burke or Franklin or a hundred others. But one can also be immensely grateful for what he has offered of Milton and Jefferson and Mill and Holmes and the rest whose statements he has edited and condensed with skill.

Perhaps the most effective single selection in the book, because it is the most comprehensive argument on the subject, is John Stuart Mill's great exposition of the nature of intellectual freedom from the essay, "On Liberty." Perhaps the most useful discussion for those concerned about contemporary threats to free speech is Zachariah Chafee, jr.'s painstaking illumination of the meaning of the First Amendment, from his "Free Speech in the United States."

Freedom, one learns from Professor Jones' anthology, is utilitarian. It is not a luxury, as so many now seem to suppose, to be allowed only in comfortable times. It is needed most, and most urgently, in times of stress. It is not a peril to national security but the real source of security. And it includes, of course, as it must to be meaningful, the right to be wrong.

An Articulate Observer

A Practical Naturalist Eyes Our Ruinous Wake

A SAND COUNTY ALMANAC. By Aldo Leopold. Oxford. 226 pp. $3.50.

THE angry books descend upon me daily, like a menacing squadron of dive bombers. More books wing in on atomic warfare.

LEOPOLD

More about Stalin and John L. Lewis. More about Soviet Russia.

Luckily we live by a lake and waterfall in the mountains of New Jersey. As I unwrap the book a doe is mirrored as she slips through the evergreens to drink. A blue heron stands in the shallow water awaiting an unwary trout. We have had egrets this year, an osprey and the 17-inch pileated woodpecker. It has been a banner year, for I have been able to photograph at close range the downy young of America's most beautiful waterfowl, the wood duck.

Such interludes, together with the arrival of such books as "A Sand County Romance," help to keep me sane in an era of international insanity.

The late Aldo Leopold, who was both a better writer and a better naturalist than Thoreau, felt much as I do about our overpopulated, overmechanized planet. He had nothing but pity for the unobservant prisoners of civilization who populate our teeming, striving cities, the bored sophisticates who have never lifted their eyes to wedge-shaped cavalcades of wild geese, who cannot interpret the hierogryphics on new-fallen snow, and who think that a quail is something that one eats on toast.

Life in Balance

AS THE author points out, while man destroys the topsoil, devastates the forests, mows down the wildlife, turns prairies into dust bowls and continues to propagate his competitive kind with a fecundity which would embarrass the rabbit, flora and fauna which have at least an equal right to live upon this planet are being rushed to extinction.

To the economic determinists (including the Communists), Leopold gave an unassailable ecological answer. When the biota of any given area is in balance, we live happily. We have food, clothing and shelter; we have a biological relationship with the other fauna and flora which allows human life to perpetuate itself without too much strife.

But when through blind, greedy, self-centered materialism (either capitalistic or communistic) we look upon this planet merely as an expendable and exploitable source of human gratification, we quickly get the land out of balance and in the end doom our own species.

Our rivers become clogged with eroded topsoil and sewage and industrial debris. Our cut-over forest land becomes nothing but a fire hazard. Floods and droughts mark our pathway to empire and oblivion. And the birds and beasts and flowers and trees, which might have helped us to retain the fertility of our ravished terrestrial ball, flee before the savage attack of homo sapiens.

He Left Disciples

LEOPOLD was no sentimentalist like Donald Culross Peattie. He was not a hermit or eccentric. He was one of the most practical and farsighted men who ever inspired our Forest Service to save some part of what was left of our dwindling wood lot. In his final job as professor of game management at the University of Wisconsin, he inspired hundreds of young men to go forth and preach his philosophy.

At his farm near the Wisconsin River he himself spent his weekends practicing what he preached. And his acute observation of every living thing upon that farm will make any amateur naturalist like this reviewer wonder if he can ever hope to become so closely attuned to wild goose and field mouse, muskrat and white-tailed deer, grouse and blue-winged teal, as was Aldo Leopold, the prophet of balanced ecology.

His chapter on the sky dance of the woodcock tops all the nature reporting of our generation. It is a tragedy that he did not live to see his book in print. To me it is more important than Thoreau's "Walden."

Pearl Attacker's Own Story Is No Sham Conversion

I ATTACKED PEARL HARBOR. By Kazuo Sakamaki. Translated by Toru Matsumoto. Association Press. 133 pp. $2.

DECEMBER 7, 1941, was the "day of infamy" to Americans. To Kazuo Sakamaki, the date means a heart-breaking failure in his divine mission for the Emperor, but the beginning of a new life.

The gyrocompass of Sakamaki's midget submarine was found to be out of order as the Japanese attack force neared Hawaii. Perfumed and dedicated to suicide in the glory of the Emperor though he was, the 23-year-old naval officer lost control of his craft and was captured alive.

As POW No. 1, Sakamaki was worse than dead, in his own eyes and those of his countrymen. This account of the effect of life here as a prisoner of war on one man's thinking is impressive in its honesty. Written originally for a Japanese audience and a best-seller in postwar Japan, the book is no sham conversion story. It is the hopeful but highly tentative development toward humanity of a mind cast from childhood in the mold of militarism and empire.

It deserves to be read, awkwardly told though it frequently is, as a forthright story of young Japan questioning itself today.—KATHLEEN L. BARBER.

Little Sicily

NEW YORK has a street inhabited almost entirely by Sicilians deriving from a single Sicilian village, and for more than 40 years a puppet master on that street earned his living by enacting a single, oft-repeated play, a 400-night serial based on "Orlando Furioso" (see "Sicilian Street," by John Kafka, published by Coward-McCann).

Unique Lotta

Gold Camps Elf Lovingly Remembered

GOLDEN FOOTLIGHTS. By Phyllis Winn Jackson. Holiday House. $3.

ALTHOUGH they probably don't know it, Betty Hutton, Judy Garland and Ethel Merman are the direct descendants of one of America's most remarkable performers, a young girl who once sang and danced her way into the hearts of gold-chasing miners in California's lonely camps of the 1850s.

Her name was Lotta Crabtree—but Lotta was the name all America called her. Lotta's life is glowingly remembered by Phylils Wynn Jackson in a new biography which should surely get some bid from Hollywood.

For Lotta was unique; her secret lay in wanting to make her audiences happy. She made friends with them in a fashion that still echoes charmingly in books of her day. Lola Montez taught her dancing in a gold rush town, but long before that her mother began to recognize her daughter's genius for rhythm and mimicry and her uncanny ability to make people feel happy.

Strikingly enough, Lotta lived until 1924, but by then she'd been retired for 33 years. In 1891 she had a severe fall through a trapdoor on tour in Baffalo, injuring her spine. She might have gone on, but, wise as always, decided she preferred to remain at her best in people's minds. Her remaining years this wealthiest woman of the theater lived wisely and well, leaving her wealth to hospitals, homes, veterans and "for spreading cheer at Christmas."

Miss Jackson's biography is largely concerned with Lotta's mother and the star, the former for her valiant efforts to make her daughter both successful and ladylike; the latter for her elfin charm.

With the ranks of her adoring generation thinned by time, it is good to have Lotta so affectionately remembered.

His Letters to Livy

New Laurels for Twain As the Romantic Lover

By Sterling North

THE LOVE LETTERS OF MARK TWAIN. Edited by Dixon Wecter. Harper. 374 pp. $5.

SAMUEL CLEMENS, who under the pseudonym, Mark Twain, cut an enviable niche for himself in America's literary hall of fame, has been billed as:

America's greatest humorist.

America's most popular lecturer.

America's most frustrated genius.

And America's most henpecked husband.

But Sam probably never guessed that 39 years after his death he would suddenly be billed as:

America's most romantic lover.

The publication after all these years of Twain's letters to Olivia Langdon, the pretty, humorless, puritanical, semi-invalid, wealthy upstate New York girl, casts a penetrating flare of gaslight on the Hannibal, Mo., boy who, while still in his thirties, became the toast of two continents.

And it will almost certainly set Bernard DeVoto and Van Wyck Brooks at each other's throats again in a continuation of the old literary brawl between these two jealous experts on Twain, for each will find new ammunition to bolster his pet theory.

Brief Conversion

IN OTHER words, Brooks can now quote Clemens himself to show that Olivia took this boisterous and vital young frontier genius in hand even before marriage; made him stop drinking entirely, sharply curbed his colorful profanity and even threatened his cigars. He can further show that she had this thoroughgoing skeptic and amateur of science kneeling in prayer each evening, reading the Bible and groveling in abject apology for any minute deviation from her rigid code of ethics.

DeVoto will counter that Clemens never gave up his 300 cigars a month, very rapidly got over his conversion to Congregationalism, and within a few years after marriage was writing Livy from England that he had discovered the beneficial effects of a drink called the Cock-tail, made with whiskey and Angostura bitters. And that he wanted plenty of the makings in the bathroom on his return, since he needed a Cock-tail before breakfast, before dinner and before supper.

All very well, Van Wyck Brooks will counter. But Livy had him under her thumb just the same. Imagine a famous lecturer and author 10 years his fiancee's senior, a veteran of the wheelhouses of gaudy river packets, roaring Virginia City and boisterous San Francisco, crawling like a whipped dog to lick the hand of this little nobody from Elmira, N. Y., who spent half of every love letter preaching second-hand sermons!

To which DeVoto could answer, Clemens wanted it. All his life he appreciated the guiding hand of one woman or another; his mother, his wife, his daughters. But he remained himself despite everything. Besides, Livy adored him, trusted him, looked up to him. These letter prove, if they prove anything at all, that Livy in later life almost never criticized. Certainly there is no evidence here that Twain was a "frustrated" genius, a henpecked husband, an unhappy frontiersman chained to respectability, or a writer whose whole product was perverted by a puritanical wife.

Welcome Bondage

ACTUALLY there is almost limitless evidence in these letters to bolster either claim. Neither and both are right.

If Twain was in bondage to Livy, it was the most gentle and welcome bondage in the history of matrimonial slavery. For he adored, cherished, respected and even venerated Olivia. His letters are almost embarrassingly profuse on this point.

But not only during his courtship (while his prospective father-in-law, the wealthy coal merchant, grimly checked references as to his character), but throughout their long and happy marriage and up to the moment when she lay dying, there is the same unmistakable depth of emotion in every word he wrote her.

These final notes, by the way, were written under particularly tragic circumstances. She was so weak that she was allowed to see her husband only two minutes a day in the last month of her life. Long before the appointed time, he would be standing miserably at her door, writing notes of cheer and love which he slipped through the crack beneath. And they are no less ardent than those written more than three decades previously when he was hoping against improbable hope that he might win her hand.

A curious thing about these letters (which so often end, "I love you, I love you, I love you") is that they are loaded with cliches and are frequently ungrammatical. Twain was probably aware that "ain't" was not good usage. But being a very unpretentious man in many respects, he used it by choice. However, he was merely slipping when he said, "between you and I," or "she don't," or "who" when he meant "whom."

The Green Box

LIVY obviously had a gentling effect upon Twain. But my guess would be that in the final analysis, DeVoto is essentially right. Livy made more adjustments than Sam. She miraculously acquired with the years a sense of humor. She was certainly fully awakened emotionally. She was evidently a good wife, mistress, companion and mother. She thought her husband (whom she called "Youth" despite his seniority) was the most amusing, most adorable, most clever, most trustworthy husband that ever lived.

She bolstered his excessive generosity to relatives, friends and even strangers. She forgave him entirely for losing vast sums of money in ridiculous business ventures. And she saved every one of his precious letters in a green box, insisting that no such love letters had ever before been written to any woman. As Mencken once said about the "battle of the sexes" . . . "As well speak of the aggressor in a piano duet."

Bay State Asked To Clear Witches

SOME of the men and women burned and hanged during the Salem witch trials nearly 300 years ago are still guilty in the eyes of the Massachusetts law. But if Daniel Runsten, a member of that State's House of Representatives, has his way, they will soon be exonerated.

Inspired to action three centuries after the fact by Marion L. Starkey's "The Devil in Massachusetts" (Knopf), he has filed a bill with the Legislature listing 29 persons who were "severally indicted, convicted and attainted of witchcraft," and demands that their names be cleared "in the hope that the delusion of witchcraft in any form may never descend on the Commonwealth again."

Surface Humor and Deep Tragedy

A Peck's Bad Boy Named Mauldin

A SORT OF A SAGA. By Bill Mauldin. Sloane. 301 pp. $3.50.

THERE WAS the time that Bill Mauldin—age 3—found a package of cigarettes and smoked most of them with no ill effects. (Or so he says.)

And there was the time soon after when he became the mascot of the leading bordello in Parral, Chihuahua, Mexico, because he loved the delicious tortillas and the motherly affection of the girls (shocked parents ended this idyll).

There were also adventures with skunks, a gila monster and a sidewinder rattlesnake; explorations of a wornout gold mine in the Arizona desert which his ever-hopeful father was seeking to reopen; mock battles with his brother Sid, both using live shells in their .22 rifles, and other occasions which must have shattered the nerves of his hard-working mother.

But to Bill Mauldin, looking at his youth in retrospect, that whole period of his life, despite its sorrows and embarrassments, seems as fascinating and adventuresome as anything Mark Twain remembered about his childhood on the Mississippi.

BILL MAULDIN
. . . Creating fresh Americana

Improbable Dreamer

MAULDIN can write and Mauldin can draw. He does not need front-line blood, sweat and tears to inspire his pencil and his portable typewriter. He can make readable copy out of almost any personal incident. And his youth is so recent that nothing comparable has been written about the 1920s and 1930s. In short, Mauldin is creating fresh Americana.

Born in 1921, son of a father gassed in the First World War and a mother who dutifully accepted that man's wildly improbable dreams, Bill spent most of his youth on a fruit farm in New Mexico. But Pop hated to stay put, so there were also adventures in Mexico and particularly in the Arizona desert, where for three scorching years during the depression the Mauldins tried to homestead a large tract of sand and cactus in the hope some day of owning a vast citrus grove.

Pop didn't know he was also acquiring a gold mine with the land—a mine which paid out at the rate of about $3 a day per man for back-breaking labor.

During these three years the Mauldins lived in a canvas-roofed shack, bought their water at 45 cents a barrel and hauled it from a distant well, survived flash floods, weeks of 135-degree heat and a tornado.

Motoring Hazard

BILL SEEMS to have been a combination of Peck's Bad Boy, Penrod, Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn. He smoked constantly from the age of 3, rolling his own from pouches of tobacco hidden about the place. But he was also a reader and dreamer, as well as a belligerent little cock-of-the-walk who fought bullies twice his size; a decent kid who early objected strenuously to race prejudice; a would-be trapper of the great north woods; a stoic who would let other boys hit him as hard as they could to prove he would not flinch or cry out in pain.

One of the most hilarious episodes in the book concerns his desire to prove he was without fear.

An old bridge had a broken plank which left a hole in the middle of the span. Bill climbed up the girders to put his head through the hole and await an automobile, figuring the wheels would pass on either side of his head. If successful, he hoped to repeat this stunt for an admiring audience of other boys his age.

But the first driver that came around the bend went into hysterics upon seeing the apparently dislocated head of a small boy in the middle of the bridge. He barely missed Bill (who ducked and ran down the wooded stream bed), and his wildly reeling car crashed into the side of the bridge, bending a wheel. Half an hour later the bemused motorist was to be seen peering under the bridge for what he could imagine was the body.

Mauldin is utterly objective about his impracticable, hot-tempered, rather lovable father, his long-suffering mother and his mortal enemy, Sid—an older brother with whom he seems to have fought a 15-year, no-decision, continuous battle. The boys were constant companions and friends of a sort. But they threw each other through windows and showed their affection in other strenuous ways.

On a deeper level, this book has pathos and tragedy. But on the surface it is highly amusing. The scene in which the pet milk goat drinks the home brew, and a neighboring drunken Irishman tries to milk the well-soused goat, is a slightly crude classic.

In fact, the whole Saga has certain intimations of immortality. What's more, it is continuously readable. Chalk up another success for the author of "Up Front" and "Back Home."—STERLING NORTH.

New Work by Mary Nourse

China and the Orient, From 3 Perspectives

FERMENT IN THE FAR EAST, An Historical Interpretation. By Mary A. Nourse. Bobbs-Merrill. 336 pp. $3.75.

THE FAR EAST, which a century ago was a vague, exotic area from which sea captains brought tea and porcelains, has now become a place of daily concern to everyone and the possible cradle of another war.

The people of this area—one third of the world's population—their aspirations, and how they were shaped by history, are the subjects of Mary Nourse's book.

She recalls the ancient day when China, occupying a position very roughly analogous to that of Greece and Rome in the West, dominated the Far East. She describes the shrinking of China's position, the rise of Japan with its "one world" idea, the development of nationalist aspirations among many peoples, and concludes with the curtain still up—the audience now watching the progress of another nation's "one world" idea.

Through all her narrative, Miss Nourse gives careful attention to the effect of Europe and the United States on the Far East and the necessity today of a partnership in which independence and interdependence coexist. In this connection, she includes a chapter on the Orient in the United Nations.

In "The Four Hundred Million" (subsequently republished as "A Short History of the Chinese"), Miss Nourse wrote a book admired as one of the best in its field. "Ferment in the Far East" is marked by the same clear, balanced presentation.

VENERABLE ANCESTOR, The Life and Times of Tz'u Hsi. By Harry Hussey. Doubleday. 354 pp. $4.

TZ'U HSI, sometimes irreverently called "The Old Buddha," was born in poor circumstances in 1835. She was still a girl when she entered the Chinese court as an imperial concubine.

When the Emperor died, the Manchu girl, seizing the opportunity offered by intrigue and confusion, grasped the power for herself. Obviously no ordinary woman, power politics, scandal and crime marked her reign.

Harry Hussey, a Canadian resident in China for many years, has written a biography of the Dowager Empress that is almost as brocaded with colorful incident as an imperial 12-symbol robe.

Giving it special interest is the personal element woven into the narrative, as he describes how he obtained the material for the book from previously unavailable Manchu family sources and government records.

FRIENDLY CHINA, Two Thousand Miles Afoot Among the Chinese. By Bailey Willis. Stanford University Press. 312 pp. $5.

THE late Dr. Bailey Willis, a geologist, made a nine-month trip through China in 1903-04. "Friendly China" is an account of that trip, taken from letters he wrote at the time. It is an enjoyable, human travel account beautifully illustrated by his own sketches made on the scene.

Pro-Labor Writer Distills History

THE LABOR STORY. By Aleine Austin. Coward-McCann. $2.50.

FOR folks who like their history short and succinct, if not always sweet, Aleine Austin's "popular history of American labor" should satisfy their limited curiosity and appetite. "The Labor Story" covers the American labor movement from 1786 to 1949 in some 244 small-size pages.

The author, though only 26, is "no ivory tower labor historian," notes the publisher . . . "She has been a worker herself . . ."

More importantly, she is pro-labor in her attitude. Miss Austin believes, she says, with the Supreme Court ruling ". . . that a single employe was helpless in dealing with an employer . . . that union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on an equality with an employer . . ."

Some Luckier Folk Need Briefing

By Harry N. Stull

IT WOULD be entirely fitting if, at the time of the Sesquecentennial celebration next year, the Kefauver bill, or a similar measure, should become law. To grant to the people of the District a part of the heritage enjoyed by the other millions of Americans would be a cause for celebration by those who have carried the suffrage banner over the years.

STULL

It is distressing to learn from persons who have traveled throughout the country that there are so many people who are unfamiliar with our political status and believe that the city is run entirely on Federal funds. The writer's personal experience tends to bear it out.

Some time ago, in a State not too distant, a school teacher was heard to say: "I don't see why the people in the District want to vote; they pay no taxes." Of course, this sentiment is not general, but the fact that it exists at all among intelligent people indicates the need to supply the facts to the "folks back home."

The Central Suffrage Conference, representing most of the organizations favoring some form of home rule, is attempting to inform members of Congress at their homes about the status of the Kefauver bill, passed by the Senate and pigeonholed in the House District Committee. The only way to bring it to the House floor for a vote is to get the necessary signatures to discharge the committee from further consideration of the bill. At its last meeting, the Federation of Citizens Associations agreed to assist in the movement.

We are assured by the Water Department that there is no danger here of a water shortage similar to the one so seriously affecting the eight million people of Greater New York. At the same time, it might be well for all of us to be a little more careful in the use of water. The fast growing population of the metropolitan area may some day reach a point where the amount of water available is a major consideration.

Engineer Commissioner Gordon R. Young should be commended for his efforts to speed up the work of the District's Board for the Condemnation of Insanitary Buildings. This is not a slum clearance project but an effort to prevent human beings from residing in insanitary houses which are both an eyesore and health menace. Such dwellings can be seen in almost every part of the city.

Bouncing Tax Checks

IT IS RATHER shocking to learn from Tax Collector Guy W. Pearson that his office is being flooded with bad checks in payment of taxes. He estimates that at the present rate about 8000 worthless checks will be received this fiscal year.

It is said that there are 200 individuals and firms listed as repeated offenders from whom no further checks will be received. Aside from the fact that it is impossible to follow the mental aberrations of a person who would offer a worthless check in payment of taxes, it is quite inconceivable that in the case of the sales tax, which has already been collected, there should be no funds available for payment to the District. The reaction of the average citizen to all this is probably that he would like to know the names of these individuals and firms so that he might act accordingly. Perhaps a few well chosen words from the district attorney might put a stop to this practice.

Law and Disorder

THE FEDERATION of Civic Associations recently gave awards to a park policeman and policewoman for their ingenuity and courage in apprehending a rapist. On the same night the Capitol Hill Lions Club gave medals and citations to four Metropolitan policemen who had distinguished themselves in the performance of duty. These were well-deserved awards.

Hardly had we had time to congratulate ourselves on the fine police force which guards our lives and property when a witness in District Court testified that three members of the Metropolitan force took hush money from a professional gambler.

Frankly, this leaves us confused. Our citizens will be loath to believe that graft is rampant in the Police Department. The outcome of these charges will be awaited with interest by civic organizations generally.

Byrd School Plan Has Good Point

By Benjamin Muse

THE ANNOUNCEMENT of State Senator Harry Byrd, jr., that he will introduce a bill at the coming session of the General Assembly to have county boards of supervisors "assume the powers and functions of the school board," will be of particular interest to residents of northern Virginia, where dissatisfaction with the present system has been especially marked.

MUSE

Under the present system, in 96 out of 100 counties the school board is appointed by a strange device called the "school trustee electoral board." This is composed of three citizens, appointed by the circuit court judge, who have no other function but to meet once or twice a year and elect school board members.

The idea originally was to keep the school board removed from politics. Actually, the three individuals whom the judge names to name in turn the school board members naturally consult with other people, and they are likely to be influenced either by the dominant political clique or by the school administration itself—which is merely another kind of politics. The net result is to remove the school board, not from politics, but only from the people.

Three Possible Solutions

THREE possible solutions of the problem have been suggested. One of these is the county executive or the county manager form of government, which gives the appointment of school board members to the board of supervisors: Henrico, Warwick and Albemarle counties have adopted one or the other of these forms. Another plan is to have school board members elected by popular vote, as is done in one county only, Arlington. The third plan, which is now officially espoused by State Senator Byrd, is that of making the board of supervisors itself function as a school board.

The last-named plan would have this notable advantage, as young Byrd points out: "The group which levies the taxes and the group responsible for the efficient operation of the schools would be one and the same." At present, the board of supervisors raises the money and the school board spends it—an arrangement which leads to endless misunderstanding.

In advancing this move for consolidation and simplification of governmental functions, Harry, jr., is following in the footsteps of his distinguished father, whose approval—it is reasonable to assume—the plan has. If it is carried through to realization, the younger Byrd will have left his own mark in a far-reaching manner upon the government of Virginia.

That's Not the Ticket

VIRGINIA Democrats are unanimously not coming forward in response to Senator Bricker's recent proposal that Republicans and Southern Democrats unite in forming a new political party. It is no surprise. There are plenty of Virginia Democrats who think like Republicans, but their favorite leaders also wear the Democratic label, and, as for the leaders, what is there to gain by turning Republican? Virginia Republicans, on the other hand, are in a receptive mood. Barring a fantastic increase in the Republican birthrate, there is no way for them to develop a winning party except by annexing Democrats—but they are evidently not going to get them in one big chunk.

An Open Letter

DEAR SANTA CLAUS:

Please bring Virginia 40 million dollars. With what we've got coming in next year, that will about do it.

In addition to letting us borrow 42 million dollars from the retirement fund and the sinking fund, John Battle has promised us 30 million dollars from the general fund for school construction. Nearly everybody thinks that is about right, but, after he takes another nine million dollars to raise teachers' salaries, there won't be any extra money left.

The colleges and the hospitals and the prisons have asked for an extra 40 million dollars, which they won't get unless you help us out, and Charlie Duke says the mental hospitals need a powerful lot of money. Wouldn't it be nice just for once to say, "Yes, boys, here's your 40 million dollars?"

So, if you could just put 40 million dollars in our stocking, it would be a great help to us all, and a wonderful relief to John Battle—who, as you know, has been a very, very good boy.

Tax Ruling Can Prod Legislature

By James P. Connolly

JUDGE John B. Gray's recent ruling against the State's method of making property-tax assessments may bring a quick change. If the opinion is upheld by the Court of Appeals, the Legislature might be asked to approve some other system of assessments at its February session.

CONNOLLY

A subcommittee of the State Tax Commission has been studying the assessment plan for several months, with the possibility of making recommendations to the Legislature in 1951. However, if Judge Gray is supported, the study may be speeded and the results offered earlier. That decision will rest with Governor Lane.

The appeal from the Gray decision has been taken by the State.

"If the appeal is turned down and if the Governor says so, the Tax Survey Commission probably will drop everything else and try to come up with some solution for the February session," said Richard W. Case, the commission chairman.

The Tax Survey Commission, as distinct from the State Tax Commission, is a group named by Lane to study the tax laws generally and suggest improvements. Chairman Case is a Baltimore attorney.

The fact that the survey commission has been studying the assessment method for months suggests that there was some misgiving about it before the Gray decision. The decision was given December 9 in the Circuit Court for Calvert County.

City Budget Endangered

THOUSANDS of property owners had stronger feelings than mere misgivings, as this column reported September 25. In Baltimore City, thousands of appeals from the new assessments have been taken. If the assessments are upset, the city's anticipated revenue may be seriously affected.

In Calvert County, the county commissioners flatly refused to order the new assessments as prescribed by the State Tax Commission. The commission countered with a mandamus suit to compel the county to comply, but the suit was dismissed by Judge Gray. He upheld the principle of continuous assessments but criticized the manner of its application. In short, he condemned its administration by the State Tax Commission as unconstitutional and unfair.

Other counties may escape being affected by his ruling because of a time factor. Either their reassessments have been completed without contest or their deadline for appeals has passed. The Baltimore City appeals were well under the wire. Unless Judge Gray's ruling is reversed, Calvert County's new assessment notices will go out just a few days in advance of the deadline there.

Oddly, the continuous system of assessments was adopted to avoid the kind of unfairness Judge Gray found. Under the old method, assessments seldom were changed if property owners knew the right people. The system fostered political influence and favoritism.

One of the virtues claimed for the change was that it would get away from all that. The continuous plan divides each city and county into five districts and the districts are reassessed in rotation every five years.

Based on War Peak

THE PLAN bgan in 1944, with assessments based on 1941-42 values, and the first round went off without any serious hitch. The fireworks came when the second round started this year, with the 1950 assessments based on the sale or market values of 1944, the peak war year.

The trouble was not only that the new assessments averaged 30 percent higher per property; they set up an average difference—discrimination, Judge Gray said—between the first district assessments and the others.

Then the new round began, of course, in the first districts. The turn of the second districts should come next year, and so on. If the rate of assessment remained the same for the full five-year round, the situation would even itself out eventually. But the rate is not constant.

Meanwhile, that 30 percent margin between the first districts and the others stands—except where Judge Gray stands between.

Utterly fair assessments are impossible under any finite plan. Judge Gray conceded the difficulty but said inequalities might be minimized if the tax commission used a better yardstick.

The judge suggested that assessments be made on current or near current values.

that the young children can walk to school. This also saves bus transportation. All of these schools and additions will be more than filled the moment they are completed. Also being constructed are two elementary Negro schools which will replace about 10 of the small antiquated schools, a fine Negro high school of 11 rooms and a shop building of 13 classrooms for Montgomery Blair High School. None of the new elementary schools will have auditoriums, gymnasiums, kitchens or cafeterias, as the need for classroom space is too urgent.

Architect's drawing of the new high school for Negro children at Rockville

Bids have also been called for 13 additional projects, an elementary school of eight rooms at Glenmont and 15 rooms as additions to three existing and overcrowded elementary schools. Plans are now nearing completion for six other projects involving 34 more classrooms, 20 at the Gaithersburg High School and seven each at Rollingwood and McKinney elementary schools. As all present classes of 40 pupils must in the future be reduced to 30, according to the new Maryland law, these 151 classrooms will just about take care of the overflow and the classes now held in basements, gymnasiums, cafeterias and stages. Mr. Carpenter, assistant superintendant in charge of construction, says that he cannot possibly estimate classroom needs for the next two or three years. The enrollment figures he used in formulating the 1949-50 capital budget have already proved to be too low. In fact, he has to motor through the lower part of the county constantly to check the new housing and apartments, as the scene changes overnight.

High Schools Next

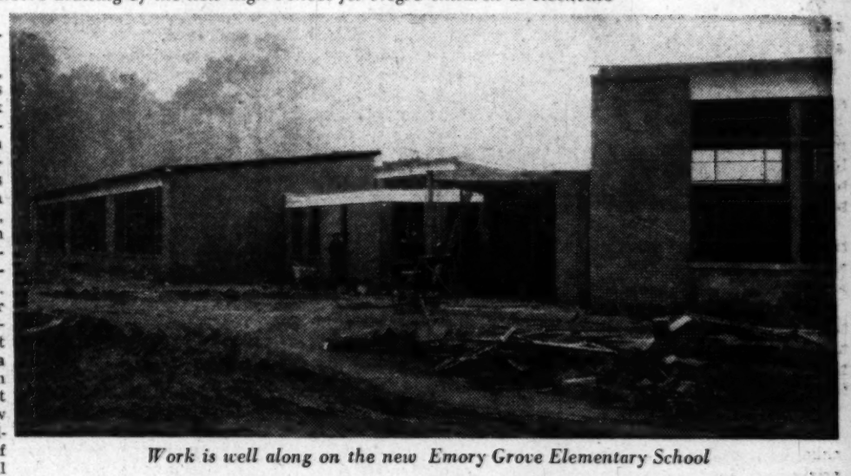
WITH the present yearly influx of more than 3000 new pupils, with building permits, predominantly for low-cost housing and apartments, still rising and issued at the rate of over 3000 per annum, with the Montgomery County birth-rate still showing a yearly increase, the need for new elementary schools alone would call for well over 100 new classrooms every autumn. The time must also come when the new elementary schools get such essential facilities as cafeterias, kitchens, libraries, gymnasiums, shop-rooms and auditoriums. In addition, several of the county's schools now in use are antiquated and should be replaced. Moreover, the junior and senior high schools are all crowded at present. These schools are expensive to build. Yet the county board of education must make plans for more of them to take care of the deluge of high school students when the first crop of war babies graduates from the elementary schools four or five years hence.

Has Montgomery County made sufficient financial sacrifices to meet its heavy school construction needs? The simplest answer lies in the history of the county's bonded debt. As of June, 1949, the total outstanding bonds amounted to $18,266,250, of which $10,540,431.60 was for schools, and the other big item of $5,056,706.95 was for roads, the latter another by-product of the rapid influx of population. In 1946, just before the heavy immigration began, the bonded debt for schools was only $4,788,370 while the total debt was $11,638,000. In other words, the proportionate amount of total county costs for schools has constantly risen until now it represents more than half of the county's total bonded debt. The actual county budgets for the school system rose for current expenses from $1,500,000 in 1946 to $3,500,000, and for capital outlay from less than $500,000 to $3,750,000. Today the school budget represents more than two thirds of the county's total annual tax income. The total capital expenditure during the last four years was more than 10 million dollars, to which the State board of education has added its first grant this year of $1,250,000. Obviously, as Dr. Pullen expressed it, "Montgomery County has strapped itself for its public school system."

Bulk Under $133

WHAT about compensatory tax income from the acquisition of new real estate developments, increased population and the new business firms that have come into Montgomery County to serve the needs of its growing population?

Mr. Alexander K. Hancock, county director of finance, points out that 95 percent of the tax bills now sent out have an assessment of less than $10,000, on which the county collects a maximum of $133 each. As it costs the county $150 (plus $50 from the State) to educate each child, very few parents, especially in the new low-cost housing projects, are paying the cost of educating even one of their children. Fortunately the county has far more taxpayers than school children. The business firms that have come into the county as a result of increased population also bring in new income. But the entire property tax of new and old business is only 23 million dollars out of a total of $319,511,960 taxed at the full county rate, or only 7 percent of the total. "Therefore the business influx would have to increase greatly," said Mr. Hancock "to do us much good, as the increased sales taxes go to the State government."



Work is well along on the new Emory Grove Elementary School

It is interesting to note, however, that the assessed valuation of property in Montgomery County rose 80 million dollars this year. This was due to new building values and to the reassessment of the high value of property in the suburban areas. But the county received about $125,000 less from the State through the equalization fund, since this fund decreases as the county's assessed valuation rises. In other words, the new building and land values created in the county by increased population are by no means a clear gain as far as the school budget is concerned.

Reflects D. C. Rate

ARE THE tax rates of Montgomery County as high as they should be?

The general tax rate is $1.90 per $100, of which $1.33 is for schools. "A dollar ninety is a low tax rate compared to New York and New Jersey," said Mr. Hancock, "but in setting tax rates we have to consider what people can pay in addition to Federal and State taxes. Furthermore, the tax rate in the National Capital is low, which influences our situation. Property is assessed at 60 percent of the present sales value.

"Montgomery pays more taxes to the State than it gets back. In addition to its school funds, the county gets back one fourth of its income tax, a share of racing receipts based on population, which can only be used for capital items, and a share of the gasoline tax for road maintenance based on mileage. It contributes to the costs of other counties through the income tax, the sales tax and the school equalization fund. We are eager to bring our schools up to the highest standards, but we cannot neglect other services needed by a rapidly increasing population, such as police, county roads, general public works, health and welfare agencies, and general administrative costs. None of these services is as good as we should like."

That the government of Montgomery County is efficiently administered can be illustrated by the sound financial methods of the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission, of which Mr. Warren Browning is chairman. In the last three years in the Washington suburban area (including Prince Georges County), 339 miles of mains have been added to the system, of which 164 miles were laid down in 1948. The commission has kept up with this heavy demand by what can be summed up as a pay-as-you-go basis. "We go only into new real estate developments where construction has actually begun," said Mr. Browning. "All builders have to put money in escrow if they want connections made before they begin to build. The cost of ordinary extensions is met by front-foot benefit assessments." This conservatism has saved Montgomery County from losing money on "ghost towns" where sewer and water mains are laid down for fly-by-night builders whose plans never materialize.

Because the increasing bond issues for schools, roads and other services might endanger the rating of the county bonds, the Montgomery County Banking Association requested the county council to call in a New York firm of consultants on municipal finance to make what is called the Wainwright Report, a complete survey of the county's growth and financial status. Mr. Fred L. Lutes, president of the Suburban National Bank, pronounced the report very favorable to the county's financial structure.

Mr. Lutes, whose bank lobby in Silver Spring looks like a busy railroad station and reflects the pace of business activity in this suburban boom-town, is proud of his county because it is so American in character. "The backbone of the county's financial rise is due to many steady incomes which are neither very big nor very small. Montgomery County could handle its own Community Chest responsibilities with ease, because we have so many citizens who are among the higher salaried Federal employes and a comparatively small number of dependent people. But if we had our own Community Chest drive, that would be doing an injustice to the National Capital, where most of our people work. Yet this reciprocity should work both ways. Washington also has its responsibilities toward us. We do not wish to change our boundary lines, but these are imaginary lines as far as human problems are concerned. And the chief of these human problems is adequate school construction for the constantly mounting number of children in Montgomery County. The parents of these children are almost all employes of the Federal Government or people serving the needs of these employes.

"The greatest source of wealth today is not in real or personal property, but in industry. Therefore, unless Montgomery County attracts industry, which it has not done in the past, there is no way out unless we get not only more State aid but Federal aid as well to carry the mounting costs for the construction of more elementary and high schools. The Wainwright Report makes it clear that we can carry a fair share of these costs, as well as all the other services needed for our rapidly growing county. But it is neither sensible nor just that our excellent financial status should be undermined by expecting us to carry too heavy a load. Our bonds are now rated B.A.A., which makes them eligible for trust funds. If we are forced to issue many more bonds for school construction, our rating would fall, and we should have to pay a higher interest rate on all of our county loans. This would be a great injustice. For example, we must expand our hospital facilities by 250 beds. We have relied far too long on Washington hospitals. We can't neglect this and other responsibilities in order to meet the constantly rising cost of the schools."

The Dividing Line

MR. S. Walter Bogley, president of the Bank of Bethesda, agreed with Mr. Lutes but ruled out the possibility that large scale industry would ever come to Montgomery County. "Large scale industry finds locations near to raw products, shipping and railroads. I don't see what we can offer big business here. The fact that it has never shown any desire to come here is proof that Montgomery County is not a favorable spot. As long as we have to depend on small industry and businesses, we can never catch up with the tax requirements for an adequate number of schools. The more $10,000 houses and the more apartment houses, the more you increase your deficits for schools. We either have to raise taxes or get outside help. As we are up against the dividing line in which our bonds are eligible for trust funds, the situation in justice to Montgomery County must be met without loss of time. The curious thing is that Montgomery County has a greater number of Federal Government workers in proportion to the total population than Washington itself. That is another reason why the Federal Government should help us carry the load for new schools."

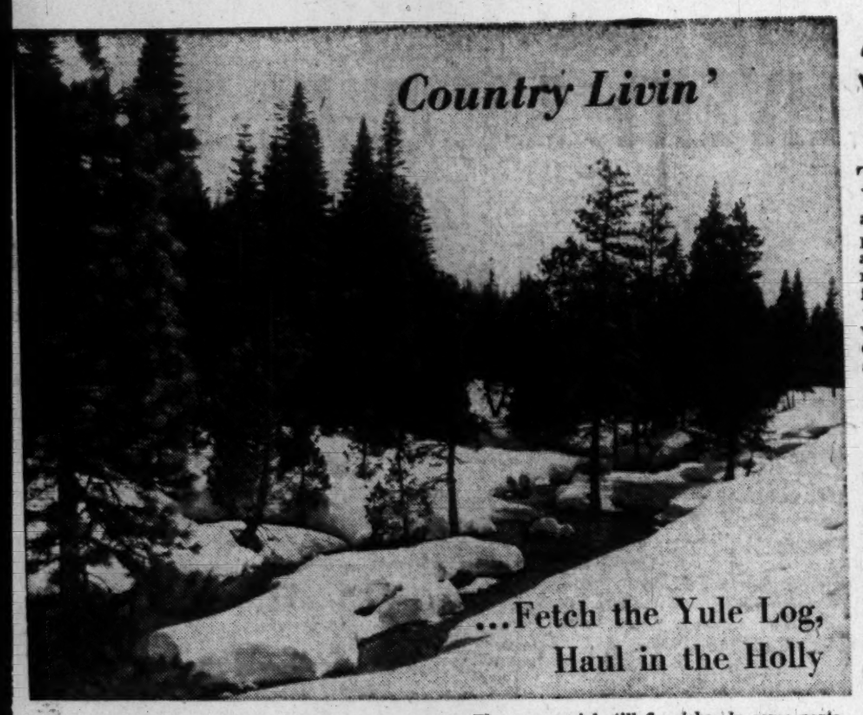
Businessmen, presidents of the civic societies and leaders of the women's organizations all feel that the least the Federal Government should do is to pay taxes on the $9,900,000 worth of property which is removed from the county tax rolls by the six major Federal agencies and the veterans' housing projects situated in Montgomery County. If privately developed, the county manager, Mr. McNayr, estimates that this property would bring in annually $1,128,600 for the total county tax, including $790,020 for the school tax. Instead, the county must furnish schools for the additional load of children whose parents work in these local Federal agencies. Mr. McNayr further estimates that about 4700 school children are involved who would occupy 156 classrooms. This entails a capital outlay for the county of $4,680,000 and an annual operating cost of $940,200. The balance sheet is not easy to compute, as the county officials do not forget that these Federal employes bring some income into the county and that the State pays part of these costs. But the net loss is nevertheless very heavy.

In summing up its analysis of the finances of Montgomery County, the Wainwright Report states: "The present financial condition of the county is sound and we believe it can and will remain sound." But the report also states that the county's most difficult problem lies in increased school needs. Because the interest rate is favorable, the report recommends that the county borrow money for school construction from the State fund of 50 million dollars just authorized by the State Legislature for school loans to Maryland counties. As heavy borowing now would place an unfair burden on the present generation of taxpayers, the report recommends that the county should limit its borrowing for school purposes to the $3,780,000 projected for the current fiscal year.

This borrowed money and the million and a quarter dollars which the State is contributing, will only just take care of the present overload of pupils. By the fall of 1950 the county will have to provide school rooms for at least 3000 more children. If Montgomery County borows more money for school construction than the Wainwright Report considers sound, it may endanger the salability of its bonds. If that should happen, all of Montgomery County's government services would become more expensive to finance.

Dr. Pullen, State superintendent of schools, says, "Education in Maryland is a State responsibility. Despite all the things the State has done, ultimately the only solution is to consider building costs as current costs and for State and county to share in that cost as it does now in current costs." But even if and when the State carries as much of the building as of the current costs, Montgomery County will still have to find three or four million dollars annually for the capital costs of its school system for years to come—in fact, as long as the vast increase in the school population continues.

As the county's leading bankers put the question, "Is it just to threaten the financial solvency of a county like Montgomery that is making unusual efforts to meet its educational responsibilities?" It seems obvious that the many leading citizens in Montgomery County are right when they maintain that the Federal Government has a responsibility to help meet the financial problems which its constant expansion has created. Furthermore, Montgomery County is the wealthiest of the five counties in the metropolitan area of the National Capital. Subsequent articles will describe the financial and educational problems created in the four other counties by the fact that Washington is spilling its population in all directions.



By Aubrey Graves

THE countryman, rich always in the benefactions of nature, is especially endowed at Christmas time. No store-bought gee-gaws or trappings does he need; the bright raiments of the season are close at hand.

In his fragrant fields grow the pine, spruce or cedar for his "Tree of Christ'—his own and that of his city friend. There, too, thrives the ornamental holly, "full of berries red and leaves of burnished green." And from the needle-carpeted floor of the forest he gathers the creeping cedar and the crimson teaberries, makes of them his welcome wreath.

With his own ax, in his own orchard, he fells the Yule Log, best of Apple, soon to glow in his hearth in changing moods of red, gray, blue and orange.

The cheering nectar of the wassail bowl—steaming ale, spices and toasted apples—are the offerings of his fruitful earth.

The man of the soil, lending his brawn to the spirit of Christmas, somehow gains added serenity and added thrill.

THE RITUAL of the Christmas tree, without which the Holy Season would be bereft of much of its meaning, has come down to us from long ago. The early Romans nurtured it; German literature of the seventeenth century mentions the ceremonials.

The Scandinavians, historically, have worshiped trees and when the pagans of northern Europe were converted, they incorporated their sacred evergreens into the Christian festival.

The gilded nuts, candles and apples which they used for decorations symbolized the star, moon and sun. To this day, the Swede or the Norwegian, building a new house, fixes a small fir to the ridge-pole, for good luck.

Stirred by the beauty of the starry sky, Martin Luther brought a tree home to his children in Saxony one Christmas Eve and brightened it with candles. These were to represent the gracious heavens which had sent forth the Christ Child to redeem the world.

In Bavaria, only pines are festooned at Christmas because it was the branches of a pine tree which obscured Joseph, Mary and Jesus from the soldiers of Herod.

OUR YULE LOG traces back to the pagan priests called Druids who decorated it with flowers and bathed it with wine during the feast of the winter solstice. Then it was burned, deep in the forest, and the soil enriched with its ashes.

The ceremonial still flourishes in some parts of the world, notably England. A log, large enough to burn a week "to shield the home from evil," is chopped down at midnight, amid the singing of carols.

With all members of the family taking part, it is hauled into the house with much adoo. A portion is splintered off, put aside to kindle next year's log, and the remainder then lighted as the celebrants sing:

Kindle the Christmas brand, then till New Year's let it burn;
When quenched, then lay it up again, till Christmas next return.
Part must be kept wherewith to tend the Christmas log next year;
And where it is safely kept, the fiend can do no mischief there.

THE CUSTOM of decorating home and church with holly dates back to the pagan festival of Saturnalia, during which friends exchanged its boughs to banish the spirits of darkness. The Christian monks, in time, adopted the dark green foliage with the red berries and called it "Holy Tree."

The Germans named it "Christdorn," since the crown pressed upon the head of the Saviour at the time of crucifixion supposedly was made of holly.

Much folklore surrounds the handsome evergreen. In Derbyshire, it is believed the kind of holly brought into the household at Christmas determines who is to be its master. If the leaves be smooth, the wife will wear the jeans; if they're prickly, the husband will dominate.

Legend endows the holly with divining powers, if gathered late of a Friday in a three-cornered handkerchief by a person able to remain utterly silent until the following dawn (obviously the gatherer would have to be a man). Plucked at such a time, by such a person, holly will inspire prophetic dreams.

A maiden may get a glimpse of her future husband if she pins such a sprig to her nightdress. His image will appear in one of three pails of water placed on her bedroom floor.

Holly, according to the encyclopedia, is dioccious. That means it has the pistillate (berry-bearing) flowers on one plant and the staminate (male flowers) on another.

Many a farmer with a forest full of holly, but no red berries, has been surprised to learn that the beautiful association of the sexes extends even to the woodlot.

For red berries, there must be polenation. To insure that, it is necessary to plant a few staminates within courting distance of the pistillates.

A Walk in the Woods Will Fill 'Dish Garden'

By Katherine B. Pozer

TERRARIUMS and dish gardens make most attractive gifts and can be varied in their appearance and as cheap or costly as one wishes. Assembling these miniature gardens is an interesting venture. For terrariums a walk in the woods on a brisk day will reveal many treasures: small evergreens, partridge berries, small ferns and a variety of mosses. With experience, we learn to recognize the collectors pieces like the reindeer moss.

Packages of terrarium material can be purchased, but it is far more interesting to find ones own. As the small plants develop they can be constant reminders of fine days in the country—the jaunt through the Maryland woods or the trip up through the Shenandoah Valley and the beauty of the mountain scene where we obtained several of the terrarium treasures.

It will surprise many people to learn that the terrariums have been in use for more than a century—for the present day interest dates back to only a decade. It was in 1829 that Mr. Ward of England brought a chrysallis into the house which he wished to preserve. He placed it and some greenery in a jar with a cover. He found that in a short time the plants had increased in size and beauty.

He began experimenting and discovered that many plants would thrive in like conditions. This method of growing tender things grew in importance until the "Wardian case" is widely used and invaluable in growing rare tropical plants like the orchid.

A Definite Art

THERE is a definite art in making terrariums. Like gardens there must be some definite plan in creating these Lilliputian forests and miniature scenes. First the material must be in proportion and not overcrowded.

Great ingenuity can be shown in the container—any glass object will do—fish bowl, brandy breather, old glass lamps and even glass teapots. A glass cover must be obtained and kept in place except for occasional moments for ventilation.

The bottom should be covered with first a layer of sand about a half an inch in depth and then a layer of equal parts of light loam, peat moss and sand. Dampen the soil before planting but do not let it get too wet.

Arranging the plants in the container is a tricky job particularly if the container has a narrow mouth. Tools will have to be improvised but in most cases a long pair of narrow shears, some sticks, and iced teaspoon and if possible long tweezers such as doctors use will help make the work more simple.

While the outdoor things are the most interesting, a search through the greenhouse will disclose many lovely small things which will make an exotic display when growing in their miniature greenhouse.

Gift for Shut-Ins

BOTH terrariums and dish gardens are ideal gifts for shut-ins and hospital patients. During the recent war it was found that the soldier and sailor patients treasuerd their small bedside dish gardens far above the most elaborate arangement of cut flowers.

Dish gardens can use much of the same material as the terrariums but the material does not generally develop as rapidly. Dish gardens, too, allow for a wider choice of container. Unique containers and accessories can make a dish garden an outstanding decorative achievement.

They can bring into being an Oriental garden with miniature bridges and pagodas, a fox hunt with all the figures of the chase or they can simply rely on fine plant materials for their loveliness.

Two Categories

WITH the choice of Christmas plants at hand, it is well to remember that they come in more or less two categories the temporary and those which it is hoped may grow and continue to bloom, another year. The life of some of the temporary plants can be prolonged if given the growing conditions they like. The gay Jerusalem Cherry generally does not last long but will do its best if kept in full sun in a cool room.

Cyclamen, too, like a cool room—around 50 degrees—and like many other plants should be watered from below. It should not be allowed to dry but should not be kept too wet. With dead flowers removed and a feeding of liquid fertilizer every other week these lovely plants should give many week of bloom. Primroses like cool rooms about 65 degrees.

Poinsettias should be placed in a warm humid spot. They can be carried over but in ordinary house or apartment conditions this is rather difficult. With most Christmas plants it seems best under average conditions to try and keep them blooming as long as possible and enjoy their beauty and not try the long process of carrying them over. They seldom give the perfection of beauty which made them the choice for a Christmas gift.

Practical Gifts Please The Gardener Most

By Alfred Putz

MANY gardeners are practical folk who will appreciate practical Christmas gifts. And what an assortment there is to choose from—in such a wide price range that it is easy to find all kinds of things that will fit into any gift budget.

A few packets of choice flower seeds, a few bulbs or perhaps a bulb planter can be had for less than a dollar. When sending greeting cards to gardening friends, why not include a packet of flower seeds — some variety they are especially fond of?

Collections of roses make an ideal gift. The plants will not be ready for delivery at Christmas but the plant dealer will send a gift certificate.

Bird feeders are timely and always welcome. A hanging automatic seed feeder is $2.85; a small window-sill feeder, $4.85, and a larger one, $6.60. A squirrel-proof hanging seed feeder of proved performance is only $7.20. The metal dome-shaped roof over the easy-to-view seed holder and feeding tray tilts and spills the squirrel that tries to rob or annoy the feeding birds. A stabilizer under the feeder prevents it from excessive swaying. A large weathervane feeder sells for $12.

Selection Varied

IN GARDEN TOOLS the selection is especially varied. If you are a gardener yourself you most likely have at least one pet tool. It may be a certain type of hoe or hand cultivator you invariably reach for when doing certain jobs. Perhaps the same kind will make a present for a garden friend.

Flower shears—the kind that not only make a clean cut but hold the flower stem until the pressure is released—are appreciated by most gardeners.

They cost around $2.50; there is a long-handle type for $3.50. A pair of green-painted plunge pails attached to a single handle for convenient carrying will keep flowers as fresh as the moment they are cut. One pail is 10 inches and the other 12 inches high. The pair is priced at $5.95.

Because gardening depends on the weather, a window thermometer is good to have. A large one with a dial costs between $1.50 and $3; an indoor-outdoor one, $7.50.

Watering Cans

INDOOR watering cans vary greatly in price, depending on size, material and finish. There is an attractive plastic one for $1.50. A copper one of 1½-pint size comes to $3.50. During the summer they make attractive flower containers.

A trowel is another fine gift and if the gardener has more than one, other members of the family can help in planting. A set combining a regular trowel, a transplanting trowel and a hand fork, all made of light-weight aluminum alloy, sells for $3.95 polished and $3.30 unpolished.

One of the smartest new accessories is kneeling apron made of washable waterproof khaki canvas with pockets to hold seed packets, garden notes or small tools and with rubber knee pads which can be removed during washing. It fits any one from 5 feet 2 inches to 5 feet 10 inches and is split in the center for greater ease of movement. The price is $3.95.

Soil-Test Kits

A SOIL-TEST KIT will be welcomed by the gardener interested in growing better plants. Small ones sell for $1 and $2.50. A $4.75 model makes 50 tests—for nitrogen phosphoric acid, potash and soil reaction. A still larger one costs $27.50. With this kit soil tests are easy and interesting to make.

A light-weight aluminum alloy wheelbarrow ($28.50) and a new-style cart ($9.95 for the 2-cubic-foot size) are accessories that make gardening more fun.

An electric hedge trimmer ($37.50) or a power mower (up to $150 or more) will appeal especially to men because these two jobs usually fall to their lot.

In more moderately priced merchandise, there are soil soakers for watering. Depending on length (12 to 50 feet), they range in price from $1.65 to $5.50. An implement that is used to aerate the soil under turf, in planting beds and around trees and shrubs, also makes the soil more receptive to water and plant foods. A single-tine model is $3.95; double-tine, $6.95.

Plastic Garden Hose

PLASTIC garden hose is another article every gardener hopes to own some day. A 50-foot length with ¾-inch diameter weighs only 11 pounds and costs $22.50. The same length ½ inch in diameter, retails for $9.95, the 25-foot length for $5.75.

There are many kinds of seed starter sets. One of the more substantial ones, made of wood measures 12 by 18 by 4 inches. It costs $2.95 and comes complete with fiberglass wick, plantbands and sphagnum moss. It is good for starting fine seeds.

An electric seedbed heater with air thermostat would make a present for someone who has a cold frame or is planning on one. The unit adapted to the standard 3-by-6-foot frame costs $6.75.

An electric seed sower powered by a flashlight battery distributes the tiniest seeds properly. Price, $2.25.

Everyone with a lawn can use a plant food spreader. It works just as well in other parts of the garden in applying fertilizer evenly. The various sizes range in price from $5.95 (20-pound capacity) to $33.50 (100-pound capacity).

Other Suggestions

GARDEN gloves, pruning shears, a fruit picker, hose holder and flower vases are other suggestions. There is at least one gardener who for years has been sending a bale of peatmoss to some of his friends—an odd present, but many other gardeners would be surprised and delighted to get one. Cost is between $6 and $8 a bale.

Garden Club Notes

A QUARTET of University of Maryland students will compete in a landscape-gardening contest for the best design of an allotted area for the National Flower Show.

The students, Gene Eisenbeiss, John McLeish, William Reith and James Jenning, are under the direction of Mark Shoemaker, associate professor of horticulture.

The garden section of the show will offer a prize for the best design. Plans will utilize the space to the best advantage to provide gardens, room areas and niches for flower arrangements.

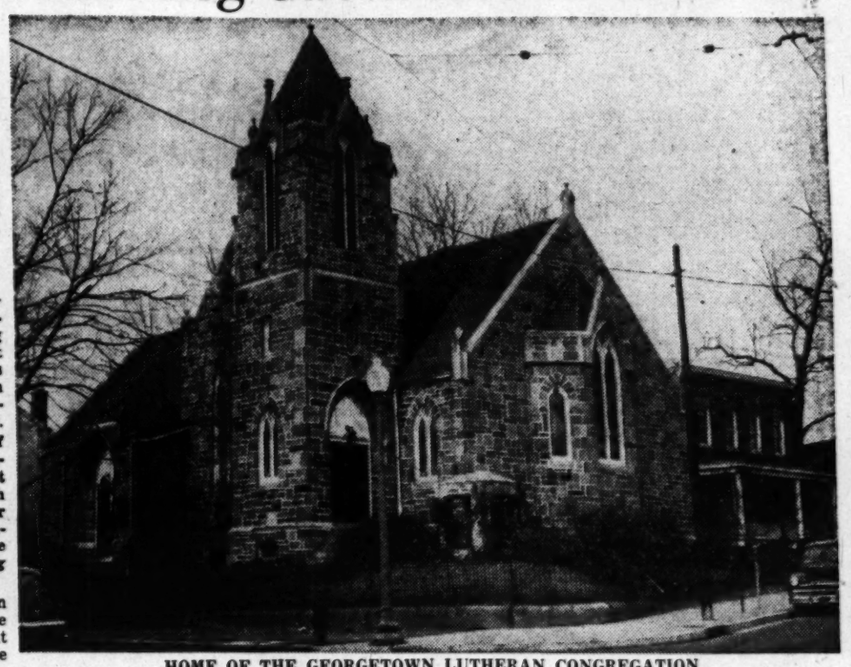
Plans will be submitted to the staging committee at a meeting Thursday, 8 p.m., at the home of Mrs. Emmanuel B. Perry, 3891 Porter st. nw.

Mrs. Perry, chairman of the garden section for the National Flower Show, has announced the appointment of Mrs. D. D. Gearhart, member of the Capital Division of the National Woman's Farm and Garden Association, as chairman of the staging committee for the club section of the show. Mrs. Arthur Bowis will be assistant chairman, and Mrs. Merwin L. Hummell secretary to the staging committee.

MRS. ARTHUR J. STEPHENS was elected president of the newly formed Rock Creek Garden Club at the first meeting recently, December 14.

Serving with Mrs. Stephens will be Mrs. B. Bechhoefer, first vice president; Mrs. Theodore Peyser, second vice president; Mrs. Paul Segal, treasurer; Mrs. B. Kilsheimer, secretary; Mrs. Alfred Klein, parliamentarian; Mrs. Alfred Klein, chairman of bylaws; Mrs. J. Goldstein, publicity chairman.

From Log Cabin to Gothic Shrine



HOME OF THE GEORGETOWN LUTHERAN CONGREGATION
... fourth edifice to occupy this spot

By Dorothy E. Boyle

THE gray stone Gothic church on the northwest corner of Wisconsin ave. and Volta pl. is the home of the Georgetown Lutheran Congregation, Inc. This is the fourth edifice erected there and was made possible through the generosity of the late Daniel Eli, a wealthy Georgetown poultry dealer.

The first church building in Georgetown was erected of logs in 1769 by German Lutherans on a lot donated by Charles Beatty and George Fraser Hawkins. The property was part of a tract called "Knaves' Disappointment."

This was the estate of George Gordon, whose house, built in 1733, still stands at 1430 33d st. This conveyance covered a little over 208 acres. Laid off into 304 lots or parcels of ground, four of these lots were given for public use and the Lutheran plot was designated on the northwest corner of 4th and High, now Volta pl. and Wisconsin ave.

Since this structure antedated any other Lutheran church here by 64 years, this one edifice also served other faiths. It was here that Dr. Stephen Bloomer Balch, pioneer Presbyterian pastor, began his work about 1780. For a time the congregation was served by an Episcopal minister named Brooke because of difficulty in securing permanent pastors and because their group was so small they could not maintain public worship constantly.

Westover Was Farm

SOME 40 years after its erection the log house fell into decay and was abandoned. A second frame structure erected about 1835 served as a parish school and was still standing at the time of the Civil War.

But it was not until June 24, 1866, when a group of Georgetown Lutherans met at the home of Henry A. Kaiser, a brewer, at 42 Greene st. (now 29th), that a German Lutheran congregation was formally organized.

There were 10 charter members whose occupations and addresses are to be found in an old directory of that date. John Kaiser ran a restaurant at 91 High st. (now Wisconsin ave.), and another J. Kaiser, a gravel roofer, lived on Valley st. near Road (now 32d. near R); George F. Wetzerich, a War Department clerk, lived at 79 Frederick st. (now 34th); Henry B. Wisner of 151 Dumbarton, Charles Memmert, stoves, tin and sheet iron worker of 95 Bridge st. (now M); Conrad Wolz, who ran another restaurant at 42 Market Space; Gottlieb Hurlebaus, baker, at the corner of Montgomery and Beall (now 28th and N), the site of the Francis Scott Key Bookshop.

George Kraft, another restaurant owner, lived at the corner of High and 1st (now Wisconsin and N) and T. Rosenbusch (the T stands for Trougott), who had one huge farm on Tunlaw rd., the area now known as Westover on Massachusetts ave. A smaller farm owned by him was located just north of the Boys' Manual Training School, across from Mount Alto Hospital on Wisconsin ave.

The zeal of these hard-working men soon attracted others, among them such additional German names as Hoelman, Winkel, Wagner, Vogt, Pimper, Ackershausen, Schlosser, Altmansberger, Maenger and Hucles.

Masons Lay Cornerstone

LATER it was decided to build a one-story brick church and parochial school building. The contract for the third edifice was given to Richard Hazel, a carpenter, living at 43 Frederick Street, (now 34th) for $2,750. The cornerstone was laid September 2, 1867, by the Grand Lodge of Masons of the District of Columbia with the historic gavel used by George Washington in laying the cornerstone of the Capitol. This group was received into the Maryland Synod in the fall of 1869 and in 1870 an English congregation was constitutionally organized supplanting the prior organization.

One of the old heirlooms still possessed and highly prized by the congregation, coming down from its early history, is a large old German pulpit Bible, printed in Tuebingen, Germany in 1730.

The Rev. H. E. Beatty, who has served the congregation for the past 23 years as pastor, says that to his knowledge, he is not a descendent of the original co-donor of the church lot, Charles Beatty. Mrs. Beatty writes the Lenten programs for the United Lutheran Church.

One of the early Lutherans whose name stands out in the gospel ministry and in the field of science, was William H. Smith who was born in Georgetown in 1816 and entered the Lutheran ministry upon his graduation from Pennsylvania College, the oldest Lutheran College in the United States, in 1834. He was also awarded the degree of Doctor of Medicine and then becoming interested in scientific studies devoted special attention to chemistry and electricity. He made a number of inventions, one for the utilization of iron furnace slag, particularly for paving purposes. It was while visiting London, England, seeking the introduction of this invention there, that he died.

Shades of Volta, Alexander Graham Bell and Smith all on a little Georgetown street!

Anzac Victors Keep Labor Gains

it talks about the incomparable New Zealand division in Montgomery's Eighth Army.

When Gen. Patrick J. Hurley was American Minister to New Zealand for a few months during the war, he said New Zealand was the only country that had never committed a crime.

Certainly the little dominion lived up to its gentle reputation in its recent election. It conducted a well-behaved campaign; it turned the old government out with a sigh rather than a curse; it gave the new government such a small majority in Parliament that the Maoris, the gifted Polynesian native race, will hold the balance of political power.

Australia has a different way of doing things, and a different reputation to sustain. The election campaign in Australia was a raucous affair.

This big, raw-boned country of only seven million people, a Paul Bunyan among the nations, a teller of tall tales and a bearer of a permanent chip on the shoulder, does not believe in doing things by halves.

A Churchillian Figure

THE voters not only rejected the Labor government; they extinguished the Labor extremists and the Communists. And for good measure they brought back to leadership Robert Gordon Menzies, their Prime Minister from 1939 to 1941, who now becomes, next to Nehru of India, the most brilliant and dynamic Prime Minister in the Commonwealth.

Washington has not forgotten a speech he made here early in the war, a speech as stirring and eloquent as any of Winston Churchill's. In 1940 he was rash enough to scold Churchill over the "half-hearted" British attempt to capture Dakar; Churchill demolished him with cables that had the force of blockbusters. But the two men kept their regard for each other.

Today Menzies patterns himself somewhat on Churchill with his rolling prose, his big cigars and his taste for vintage wines (in place of Churchill's brandy). But he can stand in his own right as a formidable intellect and a forceful, though somewhat arrogant, leader of men.

To Tories in England and Republicans here, he must seem like the very model of a modern conservative leader—a man who will stand no nonsense from the labor unions and will govern in the spirit of Stanley Baldwin and Calvin Coolidge.

Keep Social Advances

THE trouble with this picture is, of course, that it is unreal, and bears little relation to present-day Australia or to Menzies himself. The enemies of big government in this country usually forget that neither Australia nor New Zealand has forsaken the welfare state.

In New Zealand the new anti-labor government of Sydney Holland stands pledged to keep social security intact, to lend more public money for building houses and to maintain full employment. Its leaders talked plenty in the recent campaign about cutting wasteful government spending, but were careful not to commit themselves to any specific tax reductions or budget economies.

Where they differed from Labor was in their pledge to relax government controls over domestic and foreign trade—wherever possible—and to support private ownership and fair competition.

In Australia, the victorious anti-Labor coalition is just as firmly committed to the social services, although it drew a sharper contrast between free enterprise and socialist "regimentation."

Prime Minister Menzies is pledged to pay a federal subsidy to first-born children as well as to others in the family. He has agreed with his Labor opponents that if any monopoly collides with the public interest it should be nationalized—a pledge that would turn Republican cheeks in this country and a good many Democratic cheeks, too, pale with horror.

But Menzies has also promised to stop further nationalization, to outlaw and dissolve the Communist Party, to impose compulsory military service and to abolish gasoline rationing, even if it means a government subsidy. Added to this program has been the accent on robust free enterprise and individual initiative.

This is what really attracts conservatives everywhere. This is the accent they like to hear, in Menzies' own country and in many others, where businessmen squirm against the restraints of government.

A part from domestic issues, the most important consequence of the Australian election is the disappearance of Herbert Vere Evatt, the outgoing Foreign Minister, from a post of influence in world affairs.

Evatt has been a stormy and controversial figure since he took office eight years ago. There is no denying that he made a great position for himself in the United Nations through his advocacy of the small nations, his frequent defiance of the great powers (including Britain), his unending fight on the veto provisions of the Charter.

Evatt also has a weakness for self-advertisement, and a manner as cantankerous as that of Donald Duck. He has repeatedly rubbed the United States the wrong way, beginning with his barnstorming of this country after Pearl Harbor to shout the claims of the Pacific war against those of the European, and culminating with his intervention in the Berlin crisis of last year.

Evatt has made so much noise that he has seemed, at times, to be drowning out the voice of his country and his people. His probable successor, Richard G. Casey, the former Australian Minister here, knows how to be self-effacing.

Casey will have to be, for a strong-willed Prime Minister like Menzies may want to be his own Foreign Minister. He and Menzies have squabbled in the past, when they were in the opposition wilderness together. Lately the reports from Australia have said they were friends again.

Labor Has Cudgel

THE new Prime Ministers in Australia and New Zealand will have trouble enough without personal dissensions in their cabinet teams. Both Holland, in New Zealand, and Menzies, in Australia, face real danger from the same source: the labor unions.

The continuing dollar crisis may force both the new governments to courses unpopular with the labor leaders. The test of leadership, for both Holand and Menzies, will not be the speed with which they relax controls, or the fervor with which they preach free enterprise. The real test will be their ability to carry labor with them.

False steps, harsh words, rash actions by the new governments might lead to collision and conflict with the unions. Broad-gauged statesmanship can lead both countries to prosperity such as they never have known.

A Berlin Visit Melts Hatred

hungry, harrassed, disillusioned and frightened people.

There is more coal since the Soviets lifted the blockade last May, but few can buy it. There is an abundance of food, but the prices are prohibitive. Those who live in the Allied sectors and work in the Russian area, or vice versa, are bedeviled by currency troubles and bureaucratic red tape involving passes and identify documents. All are frightened—of the Russians.

Two Preoccupations

I HAVE MET a few hopeful Germans, mostly younger men and women, who believe that if only the Western Allies and the Russians would go home, they could work out some sort of decent destiny for themselves. But these so far have been in the minority. Berliners want the Russians to clear out, but they want us, the British and French, to stay.

Nothing upset Berliners quite as much as High Commissioner McCloy's announcement, on his arrival to replace General Clay, that he would live in Frankfurt rather than in Berlin to be near Bonn, the West German capital. Berliners assumed that this presaged American withdrawal and the arrival of the Soviets.

"I always carry with me a little pill," said an American correspondent's housekeeper when the rumors of an Allied withdrawal from Berlin were flying, "and I will use it if the Russians come."

Fear of the Russians appears to be the dominant emotion in Berliners' lives. The tales of religious and political persecution which refugees from the Russian zone tell do not mitigate it, and they are arriving in increasing numbers daily. Some 60,000 have managed to escape to Berlin alone in the last six months, many from forced labor camps in the southwestern part of the Russian zone where uranium is being mined in reportedly large quantities n the vicinity of Aue.

Here in Berlin, the words, "Peace on earth and goodwill toward men," have a hollow ring. Here you realize that we live in a peace that is not a peace. But here you learn to live with a war that is not a war and to pray that what has happened to Berlin may never happen to any city anywhere.

Virginia Beats GW; Hoyas Top Harvard

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

To Whom it May Concern:

SAMMY BAUGH'S best piece of quarterbacking took place last month, when he signed a new Redskin contract just ahead of the pro leagues' merger which will send player salaries spiraling downward . . . the football pros are yearning for the protection given major league baseball players, whose owners guarantee that salary cuts will be limited to 25 percent . . . One of the reasons Clark Griffith cooled on a deal for Dick Wakefield of the Tigers was Wakefield's salary. Griffith declared he'd have been willing to pay it, but "Wakefield's wages were out of line for a ballplayer who had never made good, and some of my boys might not have liked it." . . . The District Commissioners, slow to fill the vacant post on the three-man D. C. Boxing Commission, may soon be jogged into action by the reported retirement plans of Inspector Clarence Talley, police member of the Commission . . . Rick Ferrell, displaced as coach by the Washington club, will catch on any day now as one of Red Rolfe's aides at Detroit . . . In at least one phase, the U. S. Army is civilian-minded. West Point is inviting sports writers to list any gripes, suggestions or comments that could improve the handling of the Army-Navy game at Philadelphia . . . for the second year in a row, the Redskins failed to place a player on either the first or second all-pro teams.

Povich

WHEN THE NAME OF Don Johnson was mentioned as one of the pitchers who would figure in a Yankee-Washington deal, Yankee Scout Joe Devine recalled the glowing reports he had turned in on young Johnson when the kid was pitching high school ball in California . . . "They asked me if Johnson was effective with men on bases, and I said I couldn't honestly tell 'em," related Devine, "because, you see, I saw him pitch six no-hit games." . . . One of the reasons for the collapse of the Yankee-Nats deal was Clark Griffith's 40-year reluctance to deal with the New York club. He's been bitter at the Yanks ever since they fired him as manager in midseason of 1908 . . . Commissioner O. O. Kessing's insistence that the defunct All-American Conference is still in business is a maneuver to delay dissolution until after January 1, in order to take advantage of all tax benefits . . . Jimmy Lake is doing a return engagement as the announcer on the Horace Heidt show, coast-to-coast, from Uline Arena tonight at 10 o'clock. Washington's favorite announcer was reengaged immediately after his talented contribution to last year's show . . . White Sox Manager Jack Onslow admitted modestly at the New York trade meetings that he found a way to curb the right-handed hitting of the Nats' Clyde Vollmer. "I pitched left-handers against him," said Onslow, "and the rest of the league must have caught on, because Vollmer didn't scare off their southpaws, either."

PACIFIC COAST bookmakers are miffed at Eastern bookies who have been getting all the "action" by posting the Eagles as 10-point favorites over the Rams in their NFL championship game today. On the Coast all week, the books were offering the Rams and only 7½ points . . . the only change in the January 2 bowl game odds is a slight trend in favor of Maryland against Missouri in the "Gator Bowl . . . Missouri," a two-point favorite last week, is now posted as a one-point choice . . . the upset of the week in college basketball was the defeat of Tennessee, an 18-point favorite, by Dayton, which won by a 19-point margin . . . Jim Tatum's hints that he is "available" for the Florida University coach job may or may not produce him a salary raise at Maryland. In the coaching trade, Tatum's is an old and well-respected maneuver . . . There is consolation for Phil Rizzuto, who missed out on the American League's most valuable player award given to Ted Williams. In the off season, Rizzuto has already set a record for personal appearances by a ballplayer on radio and video shows . . . Aside to J. T. S., there has never been a 1000-to-1 shot in a horse racing. The closest to that figure was the 927-to-1 paid by a horse named Wishing Ring at Latonia, early in the century . . . The National Boxing Association in its recent convention hit a new low in its recommendation of Federal aid for professional boxing.

THE WASHINGTON BASEBALL CLUB will hold its annual stockholders meeting January 3 and elect Clark Griffith president for the thirtieth year. Traditionally they get dividends of $4 per share, which amounts to a distribution of only $16,000 . . . the Cleveland baseball-writing press, inured to the spectacular deals of Bill Veeck, is moaning at the inactivity of the new owners . . . Former Jockey Joe Marinelli was given a one-horse stable, a filly named Dot Beiltro, on his retirement from the saddle. The donor was Clarence C. Ortleib. The filly won for Marinelli at his first asking, at Bowie . . . Marinelli had already scored another notable "first." One day in April, 1941, he jumped into the saddle of a $700 colt and got him home in front in his initial test. The colt went on to fame as Alsab, one of the all-time leading money winners and conqueror of Whirlaway . . . The International Boxing Club, the new giant boxing trust, can't deliver important fights as fast as their radio-video sponsors want 'em, and is worrying about contracts . . . Gerry Priddy, who at $20,000 a year, was the highest-paid player in the history of the St. Louis Browns, will get an automatic pay raise since being sold to the Tigers . . . because it is custom that a star who goes to a new club is given an increase.

Cavaliers' Little Men Rally for Upset, 68-64

By Herb Heft
Post Reporter

With a second half rally which overcome a four-point deficit, the little men of the University of Virginia upset George Washington, 68-64, last night in the second game of a National Guard Armory doubleheader before 3079. In the first game Georgetown turned back Harvard, 58-53.

Barney Gill, 5 feet 9 inches tall, and Frank Allen, 5 feet 7, took over the scoring burden from Joe Noertker, the Virginia scoring wheel in the second-half surge which snapped the Cavaliers' two-game losing streak and brought their record to 5-2.

Midway in the first half, G. W. had a 19-11 lead, but watched it dissolve to 35-31 by halftime, with Noertker scoring 16 points.

Noertker added only three more in the second half, but Gill and Allen picked up the slack nicely. Two straight driving layups by Gill put Virginia ahead, for the first time, 39-38, four minutes after intermission.

Virginia Goes Ahead

A layup by Gill, scatback on the Cavalier football team, and a short set shot by Allen put Virginia ahead to stay, 54-52, with eight minutes to play.

G. W. made a hard fight of it down to the wire, but suffered its second loss in five games.

Scoring honors for the game went to the 6 foot, 3 inch Noertker, who made 19 points. Gill, Granby High of Norfolk star when that school won three straight basketball titles, scored all 11 of his points in the second half. Allen made seven of his 12 in the second half too, and his smart passing set up several scores by his mates.

Phil McNiff, shooting mostly from outside the foul circle, dropped in 14 points, while Johnny Moffatt, driving in, made 13 for the Colonials.

Noertker Big Headache

In the first half, G. W. sacrificed the scoring talents of 6-foot, 4-inch Ace Adler in a futile attempt to stop Noertker. In the second half, the Colonials put Adler, Art Cerra, and Bud Goglin on Noertker, and did stop him. But Gill and Allen were free to roam.

In the last 12 minutes, the score was tied three times and the lead changed hands four times. With seven minutes left, Virginia had a five-point lead, but with five left McNiff dumped in a set shot and cut the G. W. deficit to 59-58.

It was a dying gasp. Steve Osisek, another Virginia footballer, set up the plays as Allen and Gill put in layups and Ralph Yoos sank a foul goal. With two minutes left, the Cavaliers were on top, 64-58, enough to nullify any G. W. rally.

Ballston Indians Win Four Games

The Ballston Indians won basketball games in four different Arlington Recreation League divisions yesterday.

They won over George Talleman, 23-7, in the 12-year division at Thomas Jefferson School. They routed Branden Bulls, 50-14 in the 105-pound division at Fort Myer. Against Episcopal Boys Club in the 125-pound division, they won 32-20. And in the 140-pound division, they whipped Arlington Forest, 25-17.

Cornell Opens Ivy Schedule With Win

Ithaca, N. Y., Dec. 17 (AP).—Cornell University's basketball team defeated Yale here tonight, 60-57, to open its Eastern Intercollegiate League schedule before 6000 fans.

By Jack Walsh
Post Reporter

Unbeaten Georgetown made it five straight, turning back slightly ragged Harvard, 58-53, last night at the Armory in the first collegiate basketball twin bill of the season.

In the second game, Virginia University defeated George Washington University, 68-64.

Harvard, missing badly from the floor and foul line, came on with two late scoring flurries to make the first game score respectable.

After 10 minutes of the second half, the Crimson started going to work on Georgetown's 47-30 lead. Lanky Ed Smith dropped three baskets and John Rockwell, one while the Hoyas were playing pointless ball.

Italo Ablondi drove in for two baskets and John Brown and John Mazziotta lent a hand to carry Georgetown out of danger.

It was well for the Hoyas they did. Dick Covy, Bill Prior and Quentin Stiles sank successive baskets and Rockwell made a foul to cut Georgetown's lead to 55-49 with two minutes left.

Gerald Murphy and Stiles came through again but Sophs Mike Vitale and John Norris accounted for three Georgetown points.

Early, Harvard couldn't buy a basket and Georgetown soared to a 21-9 lead and held a 31-18 halftime margin.

Harvard Bad at Foul Line

In the long run, it was inept foul shooting that cost Harvard the game, the Redshirts put in only 9 of 25 foul tries. The scoring twins, Smith and Rockwell, missed six and four respectively.

Georgetown seemed to be having an off night itself. Its performance wasn't a bit smooth and its field goal total 22 was matched by the losers.

Johnny Brown wound up high man with 13 points and Tommy O'Keefe slipped to 10. They supplied the one-two punch for Buddy O'Grady 'culp and are only a point apart for the season. O'Keefe holds an 80-79 edge.

Georgetown lost Frank Alagia early when he was racked up going in for a basket. Alagia, veteran hard-driving guard sprained an ankle. He saw no more action but returned to the bench.

The loss was only the second for Harvard in five outings.

Eagles Choice To Beat Rams For Title Today

Los Angeles, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—The Philadelphia Eagles, seeking their second straight championship, battle the Los Angeles Rams for the National Football League title tomorrow in the last game to be played under the banner of the 27-year-old loop.

The NFL's merger with the All-American Concerence becomes official Monday, and the new 13-team-league—actually the present NFL with three AAC teams—will operate as the National-American Football League.

Powerful Philadelphia, winner of the Eastern Division crown three years in a row, is a 7½-point choice to keep its title before an expected crowd of 80,000 in Memorial Coliseum.

Kickoff time is set for 1:30 p. m. PST. (4:30 EST.).

An early threat of rain for the game has disappeared, and the United States Weather Bureau now predicts ideal weather—clear, sunny skies with temperatures in the sixties.

Basis of the Eagles' favoritism is primarily their convincing 38-to-14 victory over Los Anegeles in league play and a more impressive season record. Earlier, the two teams fought a 24-to-24 tie in an exhibition.

In league competition, the Rams

Yanks Swap Kryhoski For Dick Wakefield

By Ralph Roden

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—The Detroit Tigers finally gave up on Dick Wakefield, their high-priced problem child, and shipped him to the New York Yankees for Rookie First Baseman Dick Kryhoski in a trade today.

[Editor's note: The Nats tried to get Kryhoski as one of the players from the Yankees in a deal for Eddie Robinson. The deal did not materialize.]

Wakefield, in July, 1941, received $52,000 plus an automobile to sign a Tiger contract while attending the University of Michigan.

The bonus beauty started off brilliantly but following his return from military service in 1946, Wakefield has been a sharp disappointment.

Wakefield smacked an even .300 for Winston-Salem in his first season in organized ball in 1941. He batted .345 for Beaumont in 1942 while a member of one of the finest outfields in Texas League history. The other two members were Hoot Evers, current Tiger outfielder, and Anse Moore, now with Baltimore.

The Tigers brought Wakefield up for the 1943 season and the recruit hit .316 and drove home 79 runs. Wakefield was leading the Tigers to the pennant in 1944 when Uncle Sam drafted him. He was moving at a .355 gait and had driven in 53 runs when summoned to the colors. The St. Louis Browns went on to win the pennant on the last day of the season.

Wakefield returned in 1946 but never again reached the .300 mark. Used infrequently last season,

Kentucky Fullback May Be Out of Orange Bowl Game

Lexington, Ky., Dec. 17 (AP). — Kentucky may have lost the services of fullback Lee Truman today as it completed its home football drills for the Orange Bowl game.

While the rest of the squad worked in full uniform for the first time since resuming practice, Truman was in the university infirmary with a leg infection. He will join the squad in Florida later.

Kentucky hasn't been able to do more than limber up this week because of the cold and mud. School officials agreed to exchange game movies with Santa Clara but the films from the coast haven't arrived yet, throwing the team further behind in its spade work.

Unbeaten Navy Hands Terps 6th Loss, 75-62

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

Annapolis, Md., Dec. 17.—Unbeaten Navy played oft-beaten Maryland today. Each team retained its reputation.

Showing the effects of playing two games in 16 hours, the Terps fell out of contention early in the second half and the Middies romped to their fourth straight victory, 75 to 62.

The defeat was the sixth in seven starts for the College Parkers. A triumph against Washington and Lee mars an otherwise spotless record.

Pacing themselves skillfully, the Middies waited until five minutes after the first half to turn on their speed and once they did the tuckered out Terrapins could do practically nothing about it

Brawley Gets 26 Points

Navy played a more deliberate game before intermission and the Terps not only kept up with the Middies, but even led most of the first 20 minutes. Ten seconds before recess, however, Forward Joe Fitzpatrick of Union City, N. J., swished in a set shot and plunked in a free throw to give the sailors a skimpy 28-27 half-time bulge.

'Holler Guy' Myatt Named Nats Coach By Bucky Harris

George Myatt, wartime second baseman of the Nats, returned yesterday as their third base coach.

A "holler guy," Myatt replaces Rick Ferrell, who was released a week ago. At 34, Myatt is one of the youngest non-playing coaches in the major leagues. He's the first coach appointed by Manager Bucky Harris.

Last season, he managed the Nats' Orlando Class D Farm Club in the Florida State League, and the season before, he piloted Chattanooga. Cal Ermer, a veteran Nats' farmhand, who played the infield at Savannah, Fla., last year, eplaces Myatt at the Orlando helm.

After failing in trials with the Cardinals and Giants, Myatt was drafted by the Nats from Columbus of the American Association in 1942. When Gerry Priddy, regular Nats' second baseman, went into service, Myatt took over.

His best year was 1945, when he led Washington hitters with .296, and was voted the club's most valuable player on the Nats' second-place team.

Marquette Coach Takes Year's Leave

Milwaukee, Dec. 17 (AP).—Frank J. Murray, Marquette University's veteran head football coach, resigned today. He will be succeeded by Lisle Blackbourn, sr., Hilltop line coach.

The announcement was made late today by Chairman Charles Cobeen of the Marquette Athletic Board, who said the 64-year-old Murray had requested and been granted a year's leave of absence "to gain a much-needed rest." Cobeen added it is hoped Murray will return to Marquette as a member of the teaching faculty after his leave.

Chick Reiser Is Up But Caps Are Way Down And the Bullets Whiz by Them by 89 to 72

By Bill Burnett
Post Reporter

It was a "down" night for the up-and-down Washington Caps last night.

The local National Basketball Association forces took an 89-72 pasting from the Baltimore Bullets, a team they had defeated twice before this season, before 2219 fans at Uline Arena.

Thus one of the best 1949 individual performances of a Washington player was wasted as far as Chick Reiser was concerned. The 35-year-old former Baltimore star, turned in 18 points and a fine all-around showing only to see his team suffer a thorough shellacking.

It was the Caps' tenth loss in 20 games, Baltimore's ninth victory in 21 games.

Against the scoring threat of Reiser, Baltimore matched a threesome that handled 48 of the winning points. Paul Hoffman tied Reiser for scoring honors, with 18 points, and right behind came burly Ed Sadowski at 17 and Coach Buddy Jeannette with 13.

For slightly over three periods the Caps, with a few pauses to pull foot-long splinters from their worn-out floor, stayed somewhere within range of their determined foes. They blew a 6-2 lead at the start but trailed by only 15-14 going into the second quarter.

By halftime the Bullets were winging, 36-28, and they still had that margin with a 60-52 lead after three periods. That third period, incidentally, was Reiser's best. He tallied 11 of the Caps' 24 points in 12 minutes and at one time had the hosts only five points from a tie as both clubs sank an uncanny percentage of their shots.

Reiser was again involved in the two-minute rally which started the final period and proved to be the Caps' last gasp. He sank one circus shot and Jack Nichols, ordinarily the team's high scorer, got his first two-pointer of the game, as Wash-

Hickman Turns Yankee!

Miami, Fla., Dec. 17.—Rotund Herman Hickman of Tennessee and Yale has promised "we're gonna murder those Rebels" when his North All-Star football team meets the South All-Stars December 26 in the Orange Bowl for the second annual charity North-South game.

"You better get that trophy down now and put my name on it," he advised the Shrine grid chairman. "We're gonna murder those Southern Rebels."

To Coach Andy Gustafson of the University of Miami, who is mentor of the South All-Star squad, Hickman asked, "What's this Southern California business, Andy? If you're gonna start that stuff, I'm going out and get players from Oregon and Washington."

Hickman referred to the signing of Jimmy Powers, Pacific Coast passing star from Southern California.

Players Have Losers' Complex

Browns Hire Hypnotist to Perform 'Miracle', Bring Them Out of Second Division Trance

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—The St. Louis Browns, with little on the ball but plenty on the mind, today took their troubles to a professional psychologist.

Suffering from a chronic case of defeatism, the Browns today hired David Tracy, a somber-toned doctor of metaphysics who vows to cure St. Louis players of their neuroses and inhibitions.

Brownie Vice President Charles De Witt, a keen student of the baseball player's psyche, poohpoohed the theory that Dr. Tracy's hiring was some kind of Freudian gag by explaining:

"We have several players on our club who are definite sufferers of an inferiority complex. We are confident the doctor will weed these men out and instill in them a winning spirit, the same type of spirit for which the Yankees are famous."

"The Browns," explained Dr. Tracy, "are merely victims of negative suggestion. They have lost so many games that they now accept defeat as matter of course. I intend to teach them positive suggestion and I'm sure there will be an immediate difference in the club's performance."

Dr. Tracy, who also resorts to hypnotism in the clutch, is predicting a minor miracle for the Browns in 1950, but not a major one.

"After I teach the Browns emotional stability," he said, "they will automatically climb higher in the standings. With my treatments, the club should finish fifth. Secretly, I'm hoping that I can help the Browns go as high as fourth."

It is Dr. Tracy's belief that when a pitcher becomes tense on the mound "he loses his control and then his head along with it."

The new Brownie medico, a registered doctor of metaphysics, says he hopes he won't have to resort to hypnotism. The doctor seems to have made a shrewd decision inasmuch as the Browns frequently have been accused of being dreamily inept on the ball field even without benefit of hypnosis.

Quantico Noses Pendleton for All-Navy Title, 14-13

Over Roanoke

American U. Snaps Losing Streak, 68-63

American University snapped a three-game losing streak, winning its first Mason-Dixon Conference basketball game, 65-61.

An estimated 500 frenzied spectators screamed and whistled in a manner reminiscent of the American-Georgetown University game December 7, which the Eagles dropped, 68-63, as they saw the lead change eight times and the score tied up six times.

With 1 minute and 15 seconds of playing time remaining in the first half, Guard Leroy Ishman tapped in an errant set shot from Ralph Benson, putting American into a 24-23 lead, the first time it had been ahead in any game since the Georgetown contest.

Ishman added another to stretch the margin to three points, and then dumped in a layup after Roanoke's Paul Cap sunk a long set shot, giving American a 28-25 edge at the intermission.

American's Sherwood Webster and Roanoke's Tony Proietti divided scoring honors with 17 apiece.

Eagle Capt. Bob Lamon, after hitting only once from the floor in the first half, came to life in the second half and dropped in six from the floor and two from the foul line for a total of 16 for the night.

After one minute of the second half Roanoke's John O'Brien connected with a push-up from the foul line, knotting the count at 28-28. Then Paul Cap swished a near mid-court set shot sending Roanoke ahead, 30-28.

Lamon countered for the Eagles with his second, third and fourth field goals of the night in rapid succession, which gave American a lead it did not lose until midway in the final period.

With 48 seconds left in the game, Lamon sunk two free throws, putting American ahead to stay, 64-59.

Losers Miss Field Goal in Last Seconds

By Sergt. Roy Heinecke

Los Angeles, Calif., Dec. 17.—For the third straight year the Quantico Marines won the All-Navy football crown as they defeated the Western champs, the Camp Pendleton Marines, 14-13, today, before 12,000 fans in gloomy weather at the Coliseum.

It was a close squeak for the Quantico eleven when, in the closing minutes of the game, Pendleton almost toppled them from their throne.

Pendleton scored first in the opening seconds of the second period. Joe Bartos, a former Naval Academy and Quantico back, paced the Western eleven down field for a 55-yard march to a touchdown. Quantico took to the air in the closing seconds of the first stanza but Skeets Quinlan, triple threat lad from Texas, stopped the Virginia team when he intercepted Rudy Flores' pass near midfield.

From there it was Bartos who marched down to the Quantico 8 in the first period and took it over in the opening play of the second period. Bob Hodel missed the conversion.

Kassmann Makes Touchdown

It took Quantico only four plays at the start of the second half to score. Big Casimer Ksycewski, former Catholic University star, kicked off to the Pendleton 5 where Paul Dicorpoo fumbled and Bristol Steele, Quantico guard, flopped on the ball as it rolled across the Pendleton 10.

Four plays later, Flores passed to Bernie Kassmann in the end zone for a touchdown. Bill Eysenbach made the conversion and Quantico took the lead 7-6.

Quantico scored again in the final period when Bob Prather of Washington, D. C., picked up Bartos' fumble on the Pendleton 16. George Greco carried the ball over for the touchdown after Ken Bott and Merricks pushed the ball down to the 2-yard line.

With the lights turned on and a California drizzle falling, Pendleton staged a rally and scored when Cal Killen, kicking for Quantico on his own 49, had the punt blocked. The ball rolled to the 16.

Bartos was stopped on two plays but a deflected pass landed in Loyd Rude's hand on the Quantico 6. Hodel took the ball over on a quarterback sneak with three minutes left in the game. Hodel passed to Bartos for the extra point and the score stood 14-13, Quantico.

Hodel Sneaks Across

Pendleton threatened again in the final two minutes. From the Quantico 20, they got to their rival's seven, but on second down, with 20 seconds left in the contest, Bob Hodal tried a field goal from the 14 and missed.

Top brass of the Navy and Marines, headed by Gen. Cliften B. Cates, commandant of the Leathernecks, attended.

The game was marked by stout defensive work of the two lines. Once Quantico drove 76 yards, only to be stopped on the four. Again Pendleton held on the three and threw Quantico back.

LeBaron Stars, Pacific Closes Unbeaten, 75-0

Honolulu, Dec. 17 (AP).—Eddie LeBaron and College of the Pacific—a school ignored by bowl promoters—closed an undefeated, untied football season with a crushing 75-0 victory over University of Hawaii last night.

That gave the Tigers an 11-0 record and boosted their season's total to 575 points to opponents' 66. COP easily was the Nation's leading scorer. And it wound up No. 10 in the Associated Press poll of the Nation's top teams.

Hawaii never had a look-in. Four times the Tigers from Stockton, Calif., turned desperate Rainbow passes into scores.

COP entered the game 28-point favorites—and complained. But it raced to three touchdowns in the first quarter and led 34-0 at halftime.

LeBaron, three-time Associated Press Little All-America quarterback, put on a great show. He even converted once, via dropkick.

With a record 28,000 fans looking on, he saved some of his best shots for the final quarter. Then he broke through center and raced 50 yards to Hawaii's 20. From there he lateraled to Don Brown, who scored untouched.

Eddie Macon, sophomore Negro sprinter, ran to four of Cop's 11 touchdowns. One came on a flashing 74-yard punt return in the first period. He was the standout runner in Cap's racehorse backfield.

There was one brief fistic flurry that drew a circling crowd onto the field shortly before the half ended. But police quickly broke it up.

The fuss flared between Hawaii End Harry Kahuanui and Cop End John Rhode. Both stayed in the game.

Phil made the basket in the second game of last night's collegiate doubleheader at the Armory, but GW lost, 64-68. In the first game, Georgetown beat Harvard, 58-53

Yankees Get Wakefield

Wakefield wound up with a .206 mark in 59 games.

A change of scenery may benefit Wakefield, whose play drew the ire of Detroit patrons the past four years.

What the Yanks will do with Wakefield is problematical. They may use him as a lure in a trade for a first baseman or keep him in hopes he regains his pre-war style. In the latter event Tommy Henrich probably will remain at first base. Henrich, a right-fielder by trade, played the greater part of last season at first.

In Kryhoski the Tigers obtained a fine-fielding 24-year-old six-footer. Kryhoski, a left-handed batter, hit .294 in Manager Casey Stengel's two-platoon system before he was optioned to Oakland in the deal that brought Relief Pitcher Ralph Buxton to the Yanks. Kryhoski socked .324 for the Oaks.

The Tigers, striving to strengthen the right side of their infield since the season's close, now have added a first baseman and a second baseman in less than a week.

On Wednesday Detroit obtained Second Baseman Gerry Priddy from the Browns for Pitcher Lou Kretlow and cash in excess of $100,000.

The Tigers, disappointed over the showing of Paul Campbell and George Vico, used Don Kolloway, who usually plays second, at first base a good part of last season.

Rumors had Detroit trying to obtain First Baseman Jack Graham of the Browns, Mickey Vernon of Cleveland or Ed Robinson of Washington before coming up with Kryhoski.

La Salle Drive Tops Temple Five

Philadelphia, Dec. 17 (AP).—Undefeated La Salle College broke loose in the second half of a Convention Hall basketball doubleheader nightcap to whip previously unbeaten Temple, 60 to 55, tonight.

Southern California trounced St. Joseph's, 79-65, in the opener before a crowd of 7923.

Knicks, Philly Winners, Fulks Has 30 Points

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—The New York Knickerbockers blew a chance to win in regulation time then needed two overtime periods to defeat the St. Louis Bombers, 81-76, today in a National Basketball Association game before 16,500.

The Philadelphia Warriors downed the Waterloo Hawks, 81-72, in the opener of a Madison Square Garden double-header. Joe Fulks tossed in 30 points to lead the Warriors to victory.

Vince Boryla missed a free throw with one second left that would have won for the Knicks earlier. It was New York's thirteenth victory in the last 14 starts.

The Knicks came from behind on Carl Braun's one-hander to tie in the first overtime period at 72-72. Braun was high scorer with 23 points. Belus Smawley led the losers with 20.

Abashed Louis Promises K. O.

San Francisco, Dec. 17 (AP).—Joe Louis today brushed off Michigan's ban on further Louis boxing exhibitions.

But as result of the Michigan incident, Joe said, he'll do his best to stop Al Hoosman, his former sparring partner, next Monday in a 10-round exhibition in Transbay Oakland.

"I gotta even things up after that Michigan deal," he commented.

The incident that Louis and his handlers believe got Michigan Boxing Commission Chairman Floyd Stevens angry involved Johnny Flynn, Rochester, N. Y., one of his opponents Wednesday night at Detroit.

Flynn demanded more money and minute and one-half rests between rounds after the commission refused to permit two-minute rounds. Marshall Miles, Louis' manager, said. He added that Stevens "was furious" and said that probably was what caused him to announce the ban on exhibitions.

Louis said he didn't think the two five-round exhibitions "were so bad." The one with Flynn was "pretty good," he added.

Of the second bout, Louis said Roscoe Toles of Detroit was a fresh man and he "probably would have caught up with him" if it had been a 10-round scrap.

Asked if he definitely would not attempt a comeback, Louis quickly replied: "I wouldn't say definitely not."

Kessing Promises 'Big News' Soon

Houston, Tex., Dec. 17 (AP).—O. K. Kessing, commissioner of the All-American Professional Football Conference, tonight said "big news" will develop at the league's New York meeting next month.

"You'll have plenty to write about then," he told a reporter.

When asked why the AAC is holding its meeting prior to the January 19 meeting of the new National-American League, Kessing said "all the big news will come out of our meeting."

He still declined to give a date for the AAC get-together.

L. I. U. Wins, N. Y. U. Loses

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Long Island University, paced by 6-9 Herb Scherer and 6-7½ Sherman White, downed Denver, 58-43, tonight to inflict the second straight defeat upon the Pioneers on their current Eastern tour.

A crowd of 18,000 watched unbeaten Holy Cross come from behind an 18-point deficit to whip New York University, 49-34, for its fifth straight in the first game of the college basketball doubleheader at Madison Square Garden.

Eagles, Rams Play for Title

won eight games, were defeated by the Eagles and Chicago Cardinals and were tied by the Cards and Pittsburgh Steelers. Philadelphia won 11 of 12, losing only to the Chicago Bears.

Coach Greasy Neale has one of the top teams in pro history primed for a win and the heavy end of the players' cut of the gate, a payoff which could set a new record.

Offensively the game pits Neale's runners against the superlative Ram passers.

Durable Steve Van Buren is the heart of the Eagle backfield, but he gets plenty of support from Halfbacks Clyde (Smackover) Scott and Bosh Pritchard and Fullback Jack (Moose) Myers. Running the Eagle "T" is Quarterback Tommy Thompson, a topnotch thrower who was edged out for all-league by Los Angeles T-Master Bob Waterfield.

No less than seven first-team all-league selections will appear in the game. They are Van Buren, End Pete Pihos and Tackle Vic Sears of the Eagles, and Waterfield, End Tom Fears, Tackle Dick Huffman and Center Fred Naumetz of the home towners.

Both teams are in nearly top physical shape. Pritchard, who did not play last Sunday when the Eagles beat the New York Giants, will be able to go, although Scott will start. Only Ram casualty is a reserve fullback, Bob Agler.

Rough Teams Put Ref In Stitches, So Game Is Called, 69 to 69

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—St. Peter's of Jersey City, 69; Manhattan, 69. Game called. Referee injured.

That's what happened last night although not in the order named. Referee Vince Farrell had to have several stitches taken in his head after he got in the way of two players battling for the ball.

Up to that time both college teams had committed 83 fouls in a rough game. The coaches decided it was too rough for one official to handle in an overtime period so they called it off. No plans were made for a replay.

ington cut its deficit to 63-59.

That was all for the Caps. For five minutes they went scoreless except for Nichols' second field goal. Meanwhile the torrid Bullets were thundering to a 75-61 lead to clinch it.

Twice the Caps trailed by 21 points toward the end and their weak effort to rally resulted in little more than having Reiser, Bones McKinney and Chuck Gilmer waved to the sidelines with six fouls against each.

In a preliminary game Gonzaga defeated Calvert Hall, 47-24.

from Baltimore; Bill Wilson, the football end from Fairfield, Ill., and Captain Dave Mullaney, an Elmhurst, N. Y., sharpshooter joined forces with Fitzpatrick in the second half to turn the game into a rout.

Between them, the Navy foursome accounted for 59 points. Wilson was top man with 18, followed by Mullaney's 15 and 13 each for Fitzpatrick and Corrigan.

These four, however, took a back seat for scoring honors. That distinction went to Maryland's Lee Brawley, Duncan, Ariz., sophomore who bucketed eight field goals and 10 charity tosses for 26 points.

Navy Gets Going

Brawley was practically the whole Maryland show and fortunate it was for the Terps that the skinny 6-foot-3-inch star was hot. If not, the result would have been even more disasterous than it was.

The score was tied only once at 5-5 in the first two minutes of play. Charlie Mack then dropped in a long set shot to give the Marylanders a two-point margin they nursed until shortly before halftime when Fitzpatrick shot Navy into the lead to stay.

With a comparatively "short" team — the tallest regular is Wilson at six feet two inches, the Sailors depended on speed and utilized it perfectly. They waited until the Terrapins, who lost to Clemson last night in College Park, became tired in the second half. Then coach Ben Carnevale's swifties zoomed by the weary College Parkers.

Maryland trailed by only one point, 33-32, with 15 minutes left in the game. At that stage, Mullaney and Fitzpatrick dropped in consecutive lay ups to wined the breach to five points and fasten down the Navy victory.

IN SHORT—The victory closed Navy's Annapolis schedule until next year. The Middies shove off for Dallas, Tex., December 27 to play in the

Champ Browns Lose to AAC Stars, 12 to 7

10,000 See Albert Set Up Two Scores

Houston, Tex., Dec. 17 (U.P.).—All-Star power and a mud-swamped field overcame the vaunted Cleveland Browns, four-time All-America Conference champions, today, 12 to 7, in the Shamrock Bowl football game for charity.

The upset was the grand finale of the AAC, which merged last week into the National-American Football League.

A steady rainstorm, which reached its peak just before game time, trimmed attendance to a scant 10,000, and turned the field in Rice University Stadium into a lake. At the game's end, grimy players were washing their hands from a pool on the 50-yard line.

All Scoring in First Half

All the scoring came during the first half when the rainstorm turned briefly into a true Texas electrical storm with a display that took some attention from the game.

The All-Stars slipped and slid to the game's first score late in the first period on a 69-yard march directed by the West Coast golden boy, Frankie Albert of the San Francisco '49ers.

Albert's unerring passing to Chet Mutryn of the Buffalo Bills, Buddy Young of the New York Yankees and Lamar Davis of the Baltimore Colts moved the soggy ball to the Browns' 11. From there, Mutryn alternated bucking the line with Joe Perry of the Forty-Niners, and Mutryn marked up the counter. Albert's kick was blocked.

The Browns struck back swiftly with a 60-yard sprint from a delayed buck by Marion Motley, the former Nevada star. He was hauled down from behind on the All-Star 25 by Pete Layden, great Texas U. back, now with the New York Yankees. Then, the Browns moved all the way to the All-Star 1-yard stripe before the stout Star line held for four downs and took over.

All-Star Stand Is Futile

But it was a futile All-Star stand. Two plays later, after the Browns took over on the All-Star 40 from a kickout by Texas Tom Landry, Otto Graham pitched a perfect 40-yard touchdown aerial to Fullback Dub Jones, almost alone in the end zone. Lou Groza, the dazzling former Ohio State star, converted a boomer out of the park to put the Browns in front, 7-6.

Final score of the first half of the game found the All-Stars in a 91-yard march. Quarterback Albert performed in the feature play, a quarterback sneak for 19 yards to his own 39. Young, leading ground gainer of the day, carried the ground attack burden; and Albert connected a 12-yarder to End Alton Baldwin, one-time Arkansas star now with the Buffalo Bills.

Baldwin was standing in the corner of the end zone to score the T.D. again. Albert kicked a slippery ball wide, and the score remained 12-7.

The charity benefit game was arranged by cultimillionairs oilman, Glenn McCarthy. Proceeds from the $15 tickets will be divided between the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund, Houston's new Holy Home for the Aged and the National Kids' Foundation.

McCarthy said 20,000 tickets were sold to the game, enough to have two-thirds filled Rice Stadium.

No Sacrifice Too Much for Smith

By Charles DelVecchio—The Washington Post

Boxer's Girl, Ray Robinson Encourage Him

IT'S A BIG sacrifice for a fun-loving 18-year-old—giving up chocolate sodas and late dates.

But little Gene Smith figures that it's worth the hardship if it means he'll be boxing's bantamweight champion of the world some day.

Gene's just starting out as a pro. He'll have only his second pro fight Monday night in a five-round preliminary against Baltimore's Ted Harrison at Turner's Arena. Yet, a lot of prominent boxing figures hereabouts are already saying he has the makings of a champ.

Among them are Harvey L. Miller, District of Columbia boxing commissioner; Gabe Menendez, Turner's matchmaker; Welterweight Champion Sugar Ray Robinson and Izzy Kline, veteran coach of the All-West Golden Gloves team.

SMITH won 57 out of 59 fights as an amateur. He kayoed 40 of his opponents and was never on the floor himself.

Menendez, gleeful over the prospect of a new gate attraction, says "that kid's an iceberg. I saw him stop Joe Camarotta in 2:40 last Monday. It was only Smith's first pro fight, and if he was nervous, he didn't show it. He's very fast and what a left-handed sock he has. The first time he landed, he nearly tore poor Camarotta's head off. He'll get better fights soon."

Robinson watched Smith win the All-East Gloves title with seven straight knockouts and a decision at Madison Square Garden. Sugar Ray visited Gene in his dressing room and told him, "Listen to your managers and train hard. You'll be a real champ some day."

HEARTENED, Smith went to Chicago and won the National Golden Gloves flyweight title. Kline said, "He's the best little fighter to come out of the Golden Gloves in 10 years."

Billy Banks and Bobby Brown, a couple of fair fighters not so long ago, think Gene's pretty good, too. They're his comanagers. In the same stable is Jimmy Cooper, Washington's current bantamweight hopeful.

Gene has no drastic illusions about crowding Cooper out of the local fight picture in the immediate future. "I work out with Jimmy every day," says Gene, "and I know he's far more polished than I am. He's awfully nice to me. He teaches me something new every day and he never gets mad or impatient with me."

IRONIC part of Smith's development as a puncher is that he was termed a sissy by the neighborhood kids when he was about 9 years old.

"I had the only football in the neighborhood, and they used to say that if I wouldn't let them play with the ball, they'd 'get me,'" recalls Gene.

"Until I got to be around 12, I used to sneak out the back door to school.

"Then one day, Harold Watkins, who used to be a pro fighter, invited the kids to come down to an empty lot at First and K sts. ne., to fool around with his boxing gloves. He staged some neighborhood bouts out there, and I got to like mixing it. I was pretty fast, and though I didn't know where my punches would land I won almost all my fights."

WHILE HE was piling up honors, Gene, oldest of three brothers and two sisters, pitched in to help support the family.

He's probably the only boy who ever went straight to college after graduating from junior high school. With the family in need of funds, Gene quit school after getting a Shaw Junior High diploma, and got a job as helper in the Georgetown University kitchen.

Giving up late hours hasn't hurt Gene too much. "I only have one girl friend," he says, "and she's sympathetic. Maybe it's because she'd like to be wife of a champion someday."

Snead Takes Vardon Cup With 69.37

Chicago, Dec. 17 (AP).—Sammy Snead, the sweet-swinger from White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., today officially was crowned golf's top money-winner and captor of the coveted Vardon Trophy in 1949.

The Professional Golfers Association, which recently proclaimed Snead "Golfer of the Year," calculated that Sammy amassed $31,593 as he won six major meets and finished second or third in seven others.

The Vardon Trophy went to Snead for his snappy average of 69.37 strokes for 73 18-hole rounds.

The double grab of money-winning and Vardon laurels was a repeat of Snead's performance in 1938, when he collected $19,534 and won Vardon honors by a substantial margin.

Snead thus becomes only the second golfer to win the Vardon Trophy twice or more. Ben Hogan, sidelined this year because of injury, won it three times, in 1940-41-48. Hogan was last year's leading money-winner with $32,112.

Runner-up to Snead in the cash-collecting column was National Open Champion Cary Middlecoff, whose $24,604 barely edged the third-spot harvest of $24,512 by fast-coming Johnny Palmer.

Palmer, an iron-nerved war veteran, finished second in the Vardon Trophy competition with a 69.72 average for 80 rounds.

The 37-year-old Snead scored his biggest victories in the National P. G. A., Western open and Masters' tourneys.

Harbert Wins Pro-Am Title

Havana, Dec. 17 (AP).—Melvin (Chick) Harbert, long-driving golf star from Detroit, and Havana Amateur Pedro Menocal today won the best ball 54-hole contest of the $10,000 Havana Invitational pro-amateur tournament with a total score of 184.

Each of 29 outstanding United States pros, including National Open Champion Cary Middlecoff, Ormond Beach, Fla., played with two amateurs in the three-day best ball tourney at the Havana Country Club.

While Harbert and Menocal took up top money in best ball, Claude Harmon, Mamaroneck, N. Y., moved into the lead in individual scoring by shooting a seven-under-par 67 today to raise his 54-hole total to 201.

The final 18-hole round of the individual scoring contest will be played tomorrow.

Harbert was two strokes behind Harmon in individual scoring. Middlecoff, who led the pros yesterday, dropped to third place as he got a 71 to increase his score to 204.

New Orleans' Freddie Haas, jr., shot a six-under-par 66 to capture fourth place with 206. Haas, jr., had a two-under-par 35 going out and blazed in with a four-under-par 31.

Lew Worsham of Washington, D. C., and Al Smith, Winston-Salem, N. C., are in fifth place in individual scoring with 208.

Boys Club Yule Basketball Play Opens Dec. 27

The Washington Boys Club twelfth annual Christmas basketball tournament will begin December 27 and run through January 6 it was announced yesterday.

Competition will be held in the 80, 90, 120 and 150 pound classes with trophies being presented to the champions in all classes. National basketball rules will govern all games.

The week-long Christmas program opens Monday night with a game between the 105-pound teams of the Eastern and Georgetown branches of the Washington Boys Club. Admission to the game, which will start at 7:15, is any kind of a toy. All toys collected will be sent to the District Training School in Laurel to go to children for Christmas presents.

4 Area Schoolboys Land Star Berths

Cumberland, Md., Dec. 17.—Four Metropolitan area players were named to the Maryland All-County teams, announced today by the Maryland Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Wally Young, Bethesda, was named to a first team end post while Guard Ed Ganley of Richard Montgomery, Rockville, and Bethesda's Jack O'Neil and Blair's Ray Luckett, backs, were named to the second team.

Yipeeee!

Fort Worth, Dec. 17 (AP).—Jim Shoulders of Tulsa was named all-around cowboy of 1949 today by the Rodeo Cowboys Association.

After Dubious Ones

Stengel's Selection Should Please All

By Red Smith

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (NYHT).—Mr. Charles Dillon Stengel has been chosen by New York's baseball writers to receive the William J. Slocum award for meritorious service to baseball over an extended period of time.

It is a happy selection. No period of time ever seemed more extended than that between mid-April and October, 1949, during which Mr. Stengel labored to guide the Yankees to the championship of the American League.

Smith

Moving up into a new weight class as manager of the world champions, Mr. Stengel is required to relinquish a title which he held for a good many years. Until 1949, he was undisputed as the champion raconteur of the second division. This does not mean he has lost his gift for the apt and pointed phrase.

"This feller used to pitch for me in the minors," Casey said recently, introducing a slightly built gentleman named Jack Farmer at a dinner for scouts and executives in the Yankees' farm chain.

"HE STARTED OUT in the St. Louis Cardinals' organization. As you can see, he didn't put on much weight—and you know why."

Choosing Mr. Stengel for the Slocum award and Phil Rizzuto as player-of-the-year, the writers took some of the curse off the results of earlier elections. This onlooker has been frankly baffled by judgments expressed in the annual December sports polls, in other sports as well as baseball.

It is difficult to find fault with Jackie Robinson as "most valuable" player in the National League, for he was certainly the key operative of the Dodgers, and Brooklyn did win the pennant, which it probably could not have done without him.

However, the vote here—if it had been solicited—would have gone to Country Slaughter. Without Robinson, there might have been no pennant in Brooklyn. Without Slaughter, there would have been no race in the National League. The St. Louis outfielder enjoyed the most successful season of a flawless career. Kept the Cardinals alive during the long weeks when Stan Musial was not at his best.

THE INJUSTICE done by picking Ted Williams instead of Rizzuto or Joe Page as the American League's "most valuable" is an old story by now. Having neglected to join the chorus of dissent which was lifted when the returns were counted, this bystander offers amends now by declaring, before the year is out, that the distinction should have gone to Page.

Williams' qualifications as a hitter—and only a hitter—require no elaboration. Rizzuto was the indispensable man on the Yankees' infield. But a three-year review of American League campaigns is the only argument Page's supporters need.

In 1947, it was the lefthander's relief pitching that enabled the Yankees to win. In 1948, it was his inability to stop the opposition consistently that cost New York the championship. In 1949 the games he won and the games he saved constituted the most important individual contribution made to any team in the league.

For three seasons, as Page has gone, so went the pennant. If there is a better working definition of the term, "most valuable," it does not come to mind.

IN THIS, THE WINTER of our discontent, turf writers set about the task of selecting the horse-of-the-year. They chose Calumet Farm's Coaltown, the swiftest horse that ever ran at a mile or a mile and an eighth. Say that rapidly, and it sounds like good and sufficient reason for putting Coaltown on top.

The only point the turf writers overlooked was that Coaltown couldn't beat Capot. After the Greentree Stable colt beat Coaltown in New York, a special race was arranged at Pimlico to ascertain whether this result was or was not a fluke. Capot won again, with great ease and absolute conviction.

Having considered the evidence, electors chose the loser. This helps explain why turf writers, hardly ever require the services of an armed guard upon leaving a race track.

Custom required the boxing writers to select a fighter-of-the-year. A nominating committee considered the candidates and submitted a list. It included:

MARCEL CERDAN, a charming man with a sentimental claim to some support. For him, 1949 was the year in which he lost the middleweight championship—hardly through his own fault—and died in an airplane crash. It was a tragic record, but not a record of achievement.

Jake Lamotta, who beat a one-armed Cerdan for the title and got a thorough whipping from litle Robert Villemain in his only bout as champion.

Sugar Robinson, who was certainly no better fighter this year than in the half dozen years just past.

Willie Pep, possessor of the ring's most imposing record, who regained his featherweight title from the talented Sandy Saddler in the year's most brilliant performance.

Pep sounds like the choice, eh? They gave it to Ezzard Charles, a gladiator of excessive caution who won the fractional championship of the heavyweights by outpointing the elderly Camden fugitive, Jersey Joe Walcott, in a match of consummate dreariness.

Police Boys No. 10 Win Title By Penetration

The penetration system, first used last week, was employed again yesterday to determine the winner of the 140-pound division of the Metropolitan Police Boys Club city-wide playoff between Clubs No. 10 and 4 at Fairlawn Field in Anacosta.

Club No. 10, coached by Robby Robertson, was declared the champion by the penetration point scoring, 16 to 13, after the two teams ended the regulation game in a scoreless deadlock.

Number 4, winner of the second-half play, scored points in the opening half, three for having the ball in the 30-yard line; 10 points for having it in the 20-yard on two occasions.

No. 10 accounted for its points when its team was in the 30-yard line twice and in the 20-yard line twice, all in the second half.

This winds up the Metropolitan Police Boys Club League football season. The 75-pound crown went to Club No. 10; 90-pound to Club No. 10; 105-pound to No. 4, and 120 to No. 11.

Monday Night

Little Dynamite, Cardenas Head Turner's Fight Card

Little Dynamite, 19-year-old local lad, and Jose Cardenas, Mexico City featherweight, tangle in the feature ten-round bout at Turner's Arena tomorrow night.

Christmas shoppers are getting a break with the starting time of the first bout moved back until 9 p. m.

Little Dynamite confounded the fans in his last outing by whipping Leo LeBrun, the Canadian featherweight champ, for Dynamite's fifteenth straight win since turning pro.

Cardenas, however, may prove to be a more difficult proposition. Although the Mexican twice dropped decisions to the local ace, Jimmy Cooper, he is rated one of the nation's top featherweights.

The bout should further clarify the muddled featherweight situation. Matchmaker Gabe Menendez is endeavoring to find a suitable opponent for champ Willie Pep, who has agreed to fight here next summer.

Another promising local featherweight will show his wares when Gene Smith, former national amateur champ, goes against Theodore Harris in a five-rounder.

Lil Gene stopped Gene Camaratta, Baltimore, in less than one round in his initial pro bout last week and shows great promise of becoming a great little fighter with a little more seasoning.

Other five rounders pit Stonewell Jackson, Washington welterweight, against Richmond's Walter Rowan; Marshall Clayton, undefeated former All-Army champ, against Charlie Bennett, and Billy Unk against Baltimore's Pete Galiano.

Watner Named Head of Colts

Baltimore, Dec. 17 (AP).—Abraham Watner, president of a Baltimore cemetery firm, was elected president of the Baltimore Colts professional football club today.

He succeeds Walter S. Driskill, who will continue as general manager and coach. Before today's election, Driskill held all three jobs.

The board of directors, headed by Charles P. McCormick, continues to serve. The board consists of 18 businessmen who each put up $10,000 last year when the club's organization was revamped.

The board, in a statement, said it was because of its "desire to further the success of the club and field a winning team in the future that the board voted to obtain an active businessman to head the club for the 1950 season."

The Colts had a dismal 1949 season—the worst in the All-America Conference. The club won one and lost 11.

Watner's election started speculation that Driskill might retain the coaching job he took as a fill-in last season. Watner is a former secretary of the Naval Academy Athletic Association, and an official in several organizations.

Lane Blasts Bonus Rule

Chicago, Dec. 17.—(U.P.)—General Manager Frank Lane of the Chicago White Sox blasted baseball's bonus rule today as a "vicious circle" so far-reaching that it might choke off the lifeblood of lower class minor league clubs.

The rule, he said, was a "complete and inexcusable deterrent to the proper development of talented young ball players."

"It is ironical and startling to me that some of the minor league organizations are handcuffing themselves by upholding such legislation," he added.

The minor leagues last week voted down a proposal to repeal the rule with a count of 32 to 26 for its abolition. A two-thirds vote, or 39, was needed for repeal.

Since that tally, however, major league executives again voted to repeal the regulation and the minor leagues will be asked for a revote by mail.

Lane interpreted the fact that more leagues favored repeal than wanted to retain the rule as a "trend to do away with the whole fantastic contrivance."

Mrs. Osborne Heads Listing

New York, Dec. 18 (AP). — Mrs. Margaret Osborne DuPont of Wilmington, Del., heads the women's national tennis ranking list submitted today by the ranking committee of the U. S. Lawn Tennis Association.

Mrs. DuPont won the 1949 national championship by defeating Doris Hart of Jacksonville, Fla., in the final at Forest Hills. She announced she would not defend the title next year.

Louise Brough of Beverly Hills, Calif., was ranked No. 2 and Miss Hart No. 3. This despite the fact that the Florida girl beat Miss Brough in the semi-finals of the national tournament.

Completing the women's first 10 were Mrs. Patricia C. Todd, La Jolla, Calif., No. 4; Mrs. Helen Pastall, Perez, Los Angeles, No. 5; Shirley Fry, Akron, Ohio, No. 6; Gertrude Moran, Santa Monica, Calif., Taluca Lake, Calif., No. 8; Dorothy No. 7; Mrs. Beverly Baker Beckett, Head, Alameda, Calif., No. 9; Barbara Scofield, San Francisco, No. 10.

Proietti Decisions Dussart for Title

Brussel, Dec. 17 (AP).—Roberto Proietti of Italy became the European lightweight champion tonight, winning the title from Kid Dussart of Belgium in a 15-round bout.

The decision was heartily booed by a capacity crowd of 4,000 in the Brussels Sports Palace. The result was in doubt until the referee gave his verdict.

Proietti weighed 134½ and Dussart 134.

Jim Lookabaugh To Enter Business

Oklahoma City, Dec. 17 (AP).—Jim Lookabaugh, who resigned this year as football coach of Oklahoma A. and M. College, announced today he will go into business here January 1.

Phillipines Claim The Most Torrid Bowl Game of All

Manila, Dec. 17 (AP).—Counting up the football bowl games? Don't forget the hottest of them all—the Bamboo Bowl at Clark Field, 60 miles northwest of Manila.

The temperature was 106 degrees last New Year's Day when Clark Field's Mustangs defeated Japan's First Cavalry Division, 12-6.

There is no reason to expect cooler weather when the Guam Depot Operating Base team plays the Mustangs New Year's Day. However, the Guam players probably won't suffer so from the heat. The horseless cavalrymen practiced under the snow slopes of Mount Fuji.

Virginia Natators Whip Delaware

Charlottesville, Va., Dec. 17.—Virginia University's swimmers defeated Delaware U., 40-35, in the opening meet for both teams here this afternoon. The Cavaliers won the meet by taking the final event on the program, the 400-yard relay.

Tulsa Rehires Coach for 3 Years

Tulsa, Okla., Dec. 17 (AP).—Tulsa University football coach Buddy Brothers was rehired for another year today, a previous three-year contract expires December 31.

Tulsa, a Missouri Valley conference member, rebounded from 1948's nine losses and one tie on the gridiron to win and lose five games this season, tying another.

Has Five on Team

Wilson Basketball Coach Relies on Football Stars

By Bill Gilbert

Willard Bristor, Wilson High School's basketball coach, is thankful that the school has a championship football team.

Of the top six players on his basketball squad, Bristor has five boys who were members of the football team that won the Interhigh championship last fall. He is hopeful that the same determined spirit that took the Creen Tigers to their football title is still planted firmly in the five football boys on the basketball team.

Leo Speros, Jim Young, Preston Kavanaugh, Don Scott and Lee Brinson are the football players on the basketball team.

Speros, All-High fullback, is one of Bristor's three returning lettermen. The others are Young and Scott. Young, a six-foot, three-inch end, will be at the center post and is Wilson's best bet at getting the rebounds off the backboard. Forward Don Scott, another six-foot, three-inch end sets up the plays and is one of the club's better defensive players.

Kavanaugh and Everett Eynon will add new spirit to the club, Bristor hopes. They are both up from the second-string and Bristor wants them to appreciate their starting assignments so much they will fight off their best friends in order to keep their positions.

Kavanaugh, 6-feet, 1-inch tall and a center on the football team, has been moved from center to guard by Bristor.

Eynon, grandson of Eddie Eynon, secretary of the Washington baseball club, is a set shot artist. He was on the second string last year after playing on the junior varsity in his first year at Wilson.

Lee Brinson, halfback on the football team, is Bristor's number one reserve.

Bristor, in his second year as Wilson's basketball coach, guided the Green Tigers to second place in the Interhigh League last year. He picks Coolidge as the team to beat this year and is glad that the Colts are in the Northern division, while his Tigers are in the Southern division.

Howard Plays Conference Champ

Howard University's basketball Bisons meet the West Virginia State Yellow Jackets Tuesday night at Turner's Arena.

The Yellow Jackets, coached by Mark Cardwell, have won the Colored Intercollegiate Athletic Association's tourney two years in a row. Last year they won 20 out of 24 games.

Cardozo High plays Douglas High of Upper Marlboro in a preliminary game.

Yale Swimmers Win 47th Straight Meet

New Haven, Conn., Dec. 17 (AP). Without any record-breaking efforts, the Yale swimming team opened its season here today by defeating Colgate, 43 to 32, to stretch its consecutive string of of triumphs to 47.

The Red Raiders won three of the nine events, with Ralph Coxhead of New York City, providing the lone upset when he defeated Eastern Intercollegiate Champion Al Ratkiewich, now Yale captain, in the 150-yard backstroke by four strokes in the fast time of 1:34.3.

By Jules Loh

THE NATIONAL AMATEUR figure skating championships will be held here, March 24-26, the Washington Figure Skating Club announced last night.

It will be the first time in the history of national competition, dating back to 1914, that the Nation's Capital has entertained the skating champions.

And those who follow the graceful and picturesque sport—and they are not all Norwegians—have only one comment, "It's about time."

There will be no end of skating talent present at the Chevy Chase Ice Palace and Uline Arena, where the event is to be held.

Dick Button of Englewood, N. J., who has made quite a name for himself as the first man to hold all five of the top figure skating championships at the same time, is the odds-on favorite in the men's division.

Button holds the men's National, North American and World titles, also the Olympic and European crews.

Heading the women's contingent will be Yvonne Sherman, the New York lass who won last year's Nationals at Colorado Springs going away, and Gretchen Merrell, Olympic starlet who owns several national titles of her own.

Favored among the doubles teams will be the youthful local duet of Anne Davies and Carleton Hoffner, who astounded Parisian skating circles by finishing third in the world championships held there last winter. Both members of the team are 18-year-olds.

Red-headed and petite, Miss Davies is a former student at Wilson High School. Her skating mate played on the Central High tennis team and is now a freshman at the Naval Academy. It was the team's first appearance in world competition.

The Middle Alantics are slated for New York's Madison Square Garden in January, and the date for the Eastern championships is as yet undecided.

Angler or Hunter

Weather Just Can't Satisfy Both

By Ralph Murdock

"WEATHER PERMITTING" are the two big words of utmost interest to the average hunter and angler.

Murdock

The fisherman needs smooth water to do his best while the duck hunter is silently hoping for a freeze, sleet or snow that will bring the waterfowl within gun range.

Old man weather happens to be the controlling factor in this situation. And he's finding it pretty hard to satisfy both at the same time.

Early predictions that waterfowl would be more plentiful have proved to be quite true. But the average hunter is having a tough time getting his limit of diving ducks which is only four. Up to this writing the ducks have been congregating in large flocks out of gun range and show little inclination to decoy. The season ends on December 27 in Maryland.

The anglers who have been in action are still enjoying plenty of good fishing. Especially the rock fishermen. Remarkable catches have been made even under adverse conditions. In some instances, stripers were hooked that weighed up to 50 pounds. Oddly enough they are still catching the hefties.

THE BIG ONES have moved from the Gooses and are now generally located from Solomons Island to Point Lookout. In our opinion these schools of whoppers will stick around for at least 10 more days. Should you want to take a whirl at the stripers, there are plenty of boats still available at both Solomon's and Ridge, Md. Bottom trolling is the procedure.

When hunting you do not always bring back the game you seek. When Mr. and Mrs. Porter George went hunting in Waggoner's Mountain their main objective was to bring back a nice mess of squirrels.

Entering the woods, they separated. It was not long until Mrs. George flushed a flock of three wild turkeys. She brought down one. The other two disappeared among the trees. Within seconds she heard the crack of her husband's gun. Hurrying to where her husband was, she found that he, too, had bagged a turkey. Both turkeys were young hens, which, when dressed, weighed over 6 pounds each.

IN REPORTING their kills to the conservation commission, the Georges failed to state if they killed any squirrels.

Bill Jordan and Edward Davis braved a strong northwester and caught 12 rockfish above the Gooses. The stripers averaged 4 pounds. Davis had this to say, "It's my guess that most of the live bait (alewives and shiners) have moved down the bay. When we opened our fish they were filled with grass shrimp."

White perch are being caught in abundance near Eastern Bay The average size runs from 8 to 10 inches in length. Bloodworms and pork rind covered with mercurochrome are proving the best baits. Some commercial fishermen are using six hooks on their lines and are coming up with as many fish on a single haul. That's how plentiful the perch are in this spot.

Galiffa, Tixier, Bailey Lead Army

West Point, N. Y., Dec. 17 (AP).—Led by Arnold Galiffa, Ed Tixier and Vince Bailey, each of whom tallied 15 points, Army launched its basketball season in impressive fashion today by downing St. Lawrence University, 70-53.

The score, however, does not indicate the closeness of the game which was tied six times in the first half with only a three point margin separating the teams at the intermission when the Cadets left the floor with a 29 to 26 advantage.

Army demonstrated its superiority midway through the second half when it limited the Larries to three field goals in five minutes while spreading the gap to 53 to 43.

Chapman Gets Class B Offer

Danville, Va., Dec. 17 (AP).—Ben Chapman, former major leaguer, has under consideration an offer to become manager of the Danville-Schoolfield baseball club in the Carolina Class B League.

He came here from his home in Birmingham, Ala., last night and conferred with a committee of the board of directors of the club. This morning he said he was returning to Birmingham and would reach a decision by Tuesday—"after I have talked matters over with my wife."

Chapman was named manager of the Philadelphia Phillies in 1945 and was pilot there until July, 1948. He managed the Richmond Colts in 1942 and 1944.

Terps Take Last Workout Monday

University of Maryland footballers will run through a final drill Monday before heading for Christmas vacations.

They'll be back on campus December 26 and then go south for their Gator Bowl battle at Jacksonville with Missouri, January 2.

The Terrapins wore sweat suits and gloves for yesterday's two-and-a-half-hour session. The stress was on defense against the split T, used by both Maryland and Missouri.

Mercer, Austeri In Finish Match

Marvin Mercer and Jim Austeri, who wrestled to a one-hour draw last week, meet again Wednesday night at Turner's Arena in a "fight-to-the-finish" match with no time limit.

In the cofeature, Laverne Baxter and Irish Jack Kelly take on Ivan Kamaroff and Steve Gob in a two-man team match.

Baird Rides 3 Winners; Nora T. 2d

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, Dec. 17.—Flicka Foot, whose speed coincides with the name, won her second straight race since joining the stable of Samuel H. Rogers, of Washington, D. C., three weeks ago. The daughter of Boss Hoss and Toy Foot won by three lengths. With Mildred Scala's Nora T. second and Justin Funkhouser's Wingy third.

Jockey Jimmy Baird made Flicka Foot his third winner on the weekend program witnessed by an estimated 6000 customers. The brown filly was the favorite throughout the betting and returned a $4 mutuel. She performed over the about six-furlong course in time of 1:16.

Flicka Foot had some trouble shaking off Duke Aumar in the early stages but once she had accomplished that mission, it was all over but the mutuel price. Wingy made several moves and then weakened to lose the place money to Nora T.'s closing rush.

Baird rode his first aboard J. B. Royston's Whizz Happy, a $5.40 shot, in the third race. He came back in the fourth to substitute for Jimmy McDermott who was bruised after the finish of the first race, and he booted E. G. Hoffman's Co-ed home to the tune of a $16.20 pay-off.

J. T. Gibson's Rough Ordy caused a mild surprise when she won the seventh race, the day's secondary feature. Jockey Nick Shuk sent her to the front early and stayed there, producing a $9.00 mutuel. J. W. Seibel's Little Rocket was second with T. W. Smith's Let Me Thru third. Rough Ordy ran the mile and an eighth in a creditable 1:53.

Sammy Palumbo put up a brilliant saddle effort to win the first with L. M. Allen, jr.'s Vinita Keiv, gaining the decision in a tight photo finish with B. B. Burdett's Cedar Bunnie. Johnny Regalbuto accounted for the second event with Mrs. James O'Brey's Stroll. The Vinita Keiv-Stroll combination paid $28.60 in the daily double.

Merchants, Lions Play

The Langdon Lions meet the Southwest Merchants for the Metropolitan Amateur Football League's 160-pound championship on Gonzaga Field today at 2 o'clock.

The two fought to a scoreless deadlock last week and at the end of regulation time League President Bill Strickler authorized an "extra quarter" and when that ended the same way he scheduled today's second game.

Langdon's great guard, Albie Thompson, will be back in the lineup for the first time since undergoing an appendectomy over a month ago.

The Merchants were heartened by the news that their two stellar backs, Eddie Tawney and Charlie Newman, both injured last week, would be able to play today.

Riggs Named No. 1 Pro Net Player

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Bobby Riggs of Chicago, who deserted the courts to become a promoter, is ranked No. 1 professional tennis player for this year, it was announced today by the United States Professional Tennis Association.

Following Riggs, who won the pro title in 1946, 1947 and this year, are Don Budge, Frank Kovacs and Welby Van Horn, in order. Rounding out the first 10 are Pancho Segura, Carl Earn, John Nogrady, James Evert, Jack Cushingham and Elwood Cooke.

Jack Kramer, Pancho Gonzales and Frank Parker, none of whom played in a pro tourney this year, were not ranked because of insufficient data.

Sphan, Koslo, Wilks Share National's Pitching Honors

By Milton Richman

New York, Dec. 17 (U.P.).—National League pitching honors for 1949 were divided three ways, with Warren Spahn of the Boston Braves, Ted Wilks of the St. Louis Cardinals and Dave Koslo of the New York Giants sharing the prize distinctions, official averages disclosed today.

Off the averages, the senior circuit had no real outstanding pitcher the past season, but southpaws Spahn and Koslo and right-hander Wilks each came in for individual laurels.

Spahn, a 27-year-old fast-ball ace from Buffalo, N. Y., won 21 games and lost 14 to pace the loop in victories. Koslo, a stumpy veteran with a hard-to-hit curve, won only 11 and dropped 14 but turned in the finest earned run average, 2.50. Wilks, the Cardinals' sinker-ball relief pitcher, chalked up 10 triumphs against but 3 defeats for a .769 percentage, high mark for the league.

Of the trio, Spahn sparkled above the others. A work horse all season, the slender left-hander completed the most games, 25, hurled the most innings, 302; paced the circuit in strikeouts with 151; faced the most batters, 1258; and tied with Ken Raffensberger of Cincinnati for starting the most games, 38.

Koslo, first Giant pitcher to lead the earned run average column since 1936 when Carl Hubell's 2.31 was tops, had the company of only two other regular pitchers in the matter of allowing less than three earned runs per game. Runnerup was Left-handed Howie Pollet of the Cards with 2.77 while another southpaw, Preacher Roe of Brooklyn, finished third with 2.79.

Wilks, in addition to registering the highest won-lost mark, also appeared in the most games, 59. Pollet, the league's only other 20-game winner, ranked second to Wilks in percentage with .600. A mark he came by through 20 wine and nine defeats.

Five shutouts were tops for any hurler in the league, with Pollet, Raffensberger, Don Newcombe of Brooklyn and Ken Heintzelman of the Phillies all deadlocked for the blue ribbon.

The 34-year-old Heintzelman, who enjoyed his best season in the majors, turned in the league's longest winning streak, registering nine straight victories between June 4 and July 28. His over-all record was 17 and 10 and his earned run mark of 3.02 was fourth best among all pitchers.

Cincinnati had the wildest pitchers. Redleg hurlers issuing a total of 640 walks. Cincy's Herman Wehmeier was high man in that department, allowing 117 bases on balls while teammate Howie Fox lost the most games, 19. Wehmeier also tied Dutch Leonard of the Cubs for the most wild pitches. Each of them got seven.

Johnny Sain of the Braves allowed the most runs, 150, and the most earned runs, 130, while Sheldon Jones of the Giants hit the most batters, 10.

St. Louis pitchers fashioned the lowest collective earned run average, 3.44, but Brooklyn moundsmen struck out the most hitters, 743, and gave up the fewest hits, 1306.

Jockeys' Strike Threat Delays Fair Grounds Start

New Orleans, Dec. 17 (AP).—A threatened strike by jockeys protesting suspension of one of their number delayed opening of parimutuel windows at the Fair Grounds Race Track until shortly before post time today.

The jockeys protested the suspension of Jockey P. S. Boyle earlier this week on grounds he gave Plieto an indifferent ride in a race in which the horse finished last.

The jockeys contended the horse had never finished anywhere except in last position in a race.

2 Vital Soccer Matches Today

Two vital matches are scheduled for the Washington and Suburban Soccer League today as the league race goes into its final first half stages.

Martin's Bakery, leading the league by one point, takes on Marlboro, led by Pershing Mondorff, the loop's leading scorer; while Charles County and Uncle Billies tangle in the other match. Marlboro and Charles County are tied for second place while Uncle Billies is in fifth, only three points off the pace.

Two officials will see action in both games for the first time.

The Martinmen and Marlboro meet at 16th and Kennedy at 2:30 p. m. while the other game is to be played at Charles County field at the same time.

Fair Deal Foes Challenged By Barkley

Miami, Fla., Dec. 17.—(U.P.)—Vice President Alben Barkley praised the Democratic Party tonight for making the Nation "more prosperous, more content and more universally employed than at any other period in history" and challenged the party's opponents to produce a better program.

"The Democratic Party is not only willing, but anxious, to meet its opponents in this field of political battle," Barkley said. "We are proud of our record and make no apology for it."

The Vice President's challenge was delivered before 3360 party stalwarts at a $10-a-plate Jefferson-Jackson Day dinner at Miami's Dinner Key Auditorium. Sponsors said it was the "biggest Democratic dinner ever served under one roof."

Among those present were William M. Boyle, chairman of the Democratic National Committee; 60 of Florida's top Democratic leaders and the new Mrs. Barkley.

Barkley attacked "tree sitters and hitching post devotees" for attempting to scare the people with charges that the Democratic Party is leading the Nation down "the last mile toward collectivism."

"We are now being told," Barkley said, "by those who regard every tree frog as a roaring lion and every innocent angleworm as a spreading adder that we are on the verge of entering the 'welfare state and that it and so-called "statism" are lurking around the corner to absorb the liberties and devour the substance of the people."

"These prophets of pessimism have not told the American people what part of the Democratic program is to be repealed," he said. "They have not told the American people to what extent we are to reverse the policies of this Government in order to get back to 'laissez-faire' days of antiquity. They have not told us how far back we must go in order to recognize Uncle Sam as a complacent old gentleman sitting astride the dome of the Capitol drawing his salary in blissful self-satisfaction and doing nothing."

Buildings Topple During Chilean 'Quake Shocks

Santiago, Chile, Dec. 17 (AP).—A series of severe earthquake shocks rocked the world's southernmost city, Punta Arenas, at the tip of South America today. Some walls toppled. First reports mentioned no casualties.

The quake area covered Chile's Magallanes Province and extended across the Strait of Magellan to the territory of Tierra del Fuego, Argentina.

Chilean government telegraph reports from Punta Arenas on the Strait, said walls of the Dalmato Club and the high school collapsed. The panic-stricken population of 25,000 stayed out of doors, despite a pouring rain after the first shock, described as grade seven or eight on the seismographic scale, at 2:30 a. m. (1:30 a. m., EST.)

Economic Union For Scandinavia, Britain Proposed

Stockholm, Dec. 17 (AP)—An agreement to recommend a loose economic union between Britain and Scandinavia was reached tonight at the four-power conference in Stockholm.

The union would remain open for other nations to join.

The decision came at the end of a three-day meeting here between 27 economic experts from Britain, Denmark, Norway and Sweden.

The conference was called to consider proposals for closer economic cooperation presented by Britain to the Scandinavian countries December 5.

The British proposals centered on facilitating a free movement of payments among the four countries, to break down barriers to a free flow of trade.

French Girl, Pole Plead Guilty In 'Spy' Trial

Wroclaw, Poland, Dec. 17 (AP).—A French girl and a young Pole pleaded guilty before a military court here today to charges of spying for France.

They were Miss Yvonne Bassaler, 29, former secretary of the French Consulate in Warsaw, and Jan Kubisiak, 26, a Polish student who described Miss Bassaler as his boss.

One of their four fellow defendants, former messenger Basil Brousikov, entered a guilty plea at the opening of the trial yesterday.

Miss Bassaler said that persons involved in the spy plot ranged from the late Gen. Georges Teysier, French military attache in Poland from 1946 to 1948, to relatively unknown workers in consular officers. She said Teysier's assistant, Maj. Alfred Humm, was the actual chief of French intelligence in Poland.

Northern Virginia High School for Catholics Planned

A Roman Catholic high school for boys and girls in Arlington, Falls Church, and Fairfax, is planned on an 18-acre East Falls Church site, a church source disclosed yesterday.

The Right Reverend Edward L. Stephens, dean of Northern Virginia, said the proposed school would care for 600 youngsters. An agreement of sale for the site, a portion of the Crossman tract bounded by Little Falls rd. and N. Underwood st., has already been signed, Monseignor Stephens said.

Pre-Christmas Events Scheduled by USO

A special program of holiday activities for servicemen will begin at the USO, YMCA branch, 1736 G st. nw., at 7 p. m., today with a play, "Night in Bethlehem."

A Christmas tree trimming party is set for 8 p.m., Tuesday, and the USO-YMCA Glee Club will sing carols in wards of the Quantico Hospital Thursday evening. There will be a Christmas Eve dance at 8:30 p. m. Saturday.

Gift-wrapping service will be offered servicemen all week.

Why Do We Fight Against It?

We all sell something. We either sell our backs, our hands or legs, or we sell our minds and thoughts. When we sell strength of our bodies to a man or to a company, our labor is turned into profit out of which we must take a limited weekly salary and be content with an uncertain future. However, if we direct our minds and thoughts into the right channel, there is no limit to the earnings that can be enjoyed. There is good money in sales-work, if you have something worthwhile to sell and any man can learn to sell if he is willing to apply himself to the job of selling. There is stability and continuous employment, too, if you are fortunate enough to make contacts with a liberal and well-established company and that is very important.

We are prepared to show you security and weekly earnings that will surprise you and then teach you every phase of the business. The short period of training may be worth thousands of dollars to you and yet it will not cost you a dime. Give us your mind and thoughts for 3 days and you will be prepared to "Go it alone with confidence and assurance. If you are game enough to put this to a test, apply in person at

FLORIDA

What About Retirement in Florida?

Are you one of the many who picture a comfortable home in a mild climate—a couple of acres of good land, with room for a garden of tropical fruit? De Soto Acres, just outside the city limits of Sarasota, within 3½ miles of the city hall, are made to order for you. Lots are approximately 300x300, containing a minimum of 2 acres. Prices begin at $850, 20% down and a balance in small monthly payments. The smart thing is to buy now, while prices are low, and have your place paid for when you retire. A number of lots have already been sold to Washingtonians, whom we use as reference. No taxes up to $5,000, and no city taxes whatever. Title insured, and title land is sold on a money-back guarantee, if you are dissatisfied with your purchase. Write for descriptive folder with map of Sarasota, or phone our office.

Give Your Family a
Chernerized Car
For Christmas!

This Christmas give your family the most wanted name used car on the road. Chernerized cars are extra good buys now, because Uncle Joe is swamped with trades on the new 1950 Ford and Mercury. And it's extra easy to buy, because of Uncle Joe's bigger trades, easier terms, lower finance charges. Save your cash for Christmas too . . . there's no monthly payment until February, 1950!

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1949

A KNIGHT in shining armor was every girl's dream many centuries ago. Miss Sylvia Nabuco, debutante niece of the Brazilian Ambassador, Mauricio Nabuco, finds the armor at the National Gallery where she went to see the fabulous collection of Austrian art. She's not interested in finding her knight just now anyway—not until she finishes school

LEARNING her lessons is easy for lively and lovely Sylvia Nabuco (left), daughter of Senhor Jose Nabuco and Senhora Nabuco of Rio de Janeiro. Sylvia is only 17 years old and is already in Junior College at Georgetown Visitation Convent. In the study corner with her are Ligia Caino and Carmen Trigo, both of Puerto Rico, and Patricia Green of Atlanta. Miss Nabuco will be presented to Capital society Tuesday at a gay and brilliant ball to be given by her uncle, the Brazilian Ambassador, Mauricio Nabuco, at the embassy

Washington's Debutante of the Week

A Brazilian Bud With a Dixie Drawl

By Marie McNair

YOUNG enough to laugh at life; pretty enough for a magazine cover, and gay enough to turn handsprings.

That's Sylvia Nabuco, unofficial emissary from Brazil, who's bringing new life to the Brazilian Embassy's marble halls.

The daughter of a noted lawyer of Rio—Jose Nabuco and Mme. Nabuco—black-eyed Sylvia is the apple of her bachelor uncle's eye. And it's the kindly Mauricio Nabuco, Brazilian Ambassador, who will present his niece to society this winter at what promises to be the plushiest party of the season, a ball at the handsome embassy on Tuesday night.

Poised Teenager

ALTHOUGH she's only 17, Miss Nabuco's inherent poise is far beyond her years. Brought up by a French governess, who taught her beautiful French along with the social graces and the three R's, Sylvia was 9 years old before she saw her first school classroom.

Last year she came to Washington for the first time, for her senior year of Georgetown Visitation Convent. She came back again this year to enter the convent's junior college because she liked everything she'd learned about Americans and Americana.

Likes American Dancing

SHE likes picnics and football games, riding, and best of all dancing. At home in Rio there were always young people coming in, sometimes not more than a dozen, to dance to the latest American recordings.

At home, too, there are three younger brothers and a small sister. Another brother, Joaquin, named for his illustrious grandfather, once Ambassador to the U. S., is at school in Washington, a student at Georgetown Preparatory School.

Thrilled by the Whirl

THE dozens of white engraved invitations framing her dressing table mirror this winter are all new to Sylvia Nabuco, and she admits to being thrilled by it all. Following the continental custom in Rio, daughters of debutante age have no formal introduction to society. Instead, they ease gracefully into the picture by receiving with their mothers at tea and taking their place at their parents' dinner parties.

But Miss Nabuco likes the American way. She's going to all the festivities, for which she has bought four new white evening dresses, while her own debut frock of white tulle, which she'll wear with pink satin gloves, has just arrived from Paris.

Step right in, stagline, on Tuesday night. Don't hesitate because you don't speak Portuguese. Sylvia learned much of her English in Rio from American popular songs. She peppers her speech with the latest slang. And even speaks it with a Southern accent!

"A PRETTY Girl Is Like a Melody" is what Antonio Borges Castello Branco, Second Secretary of the Braziliart Embassy, might be playing. Instead he's going over the very newest tune on the embassy piano, with Miss Nabuco as his appreciative audience. Like all young girls, she's a record collector, keeps up with the latest in swing

Mme. Pandit, Mr. Anderson Have Their Ratings But:

Official Protocol Always Has A Problem Child

By Mary Van Rensselaer Thayer

IN PARIS some years ago, during a particularly depressing international crisis when world collapse seemed imminent, under headlines screaming destruction, the Paris Herald ran a front page box headed "Duck Lays Double-Yolked Egg." The irrelevant juxtaposition of this absurd story to us, at least, was side-splitting. Yet during ensuing crowded years, the cause of the awesome crisis has been forgotten, and only the mama duck's maternal agility remembered.

In everyday living, protocol and its less exacting side-kick, etiquette, are somewhat like the duck's double-yoked egg. Major calamities occur so continually their individual impact is soon blurred. It's the pinpricks of tiny problems which linger.

This holiday season, when Washingtonians, official and otherwise, are decking the festive board, protocol and etiquette come into their own. Neither is static. Both progress and adapt themselves to the times. During the past few years unification, women diplomats, visiting monarchs and heads of state, and newly created jobs like the chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff have caused horrible hostess havoc.

Take the most delicate problem, officially "de-sexing" a distinguished lady. A few months ago, Mme. Pandit, the first woman Ambassador accredited to Washington, was officially accorded "stag" status. This meant India's envoy could be and had to be invited to stag functions given officially for diplomats.

Without this rating Mme. Pandit could not effectively carry out her ambassadorial duties. Next, everyone worried, what was Mme. Pandit to do after dinner, stay with the men, go with the ladies? Mme. Pandit has solved the issue sensibly—she never leaves a stag dinner, stays right on with the men. At a mixed meal, she divides her attention, leaving the table with the women then, later, rejoining the men.

Next on the agenda is our first woman Ambassador's husband, John Anderson. Strictly speaking, this is not our problem. It's tossed to the Danes. After considerable brow-knitting, the Danish protocol boys have come up with an answer which, should Am-

Mary Haworth's Mail

Engaged to Marry Man Who Shows No Signs Of Being Jealous, Girl Fears This Means He Doesn't Really Love Her; How About It?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I am 28 and my fiance is 33; and my problem may seem a silly one, but it has become quite disturbing to me. In various articles I have read statements that it is human nature to feel jealous in some degree; but in the year that I've been engaged to Lew, he has never displayed jealousy in any shape or form, and I fear that he may not really love me.

Lew is quiet and reserved by nature, fairly affectionate when we are alone, never displays affection in public in any way, and once remarked to a friend, "Yes, I am getting married; after all, it is time I settled down!"

He is thoughtful on any holiday, wants the best for us, and speaks often of our marriage. We are together a great deal and enjoy each other's company, but he doesn't kiss me as often as is expected of a fiance. I am possessively inclined, jealous but not extremely so, and I love a good time.

Will Marriage Be Successful?

ONCE when Lew failed to meet me at the appointed time I went out with a girl friend and came home quite late. Lew was there, explained his failure to meet me, and although he asked where I'd been he accepted my explanation without question. If I believed he simply trusted me I'd be happy, but I'm inclined to think he simply doesn't care enough to wonder about it! That is his attitude.

I am an attractive girl, accustomed to attentions in the past, and I can't quite understand Lew's tendency to take me for granted. His disinterest annoys me no end. I was extremely unhappy some time back, when I ceased dating Lew before we got engaged. Then too he seemed not to mind, although eventually he came back. What do you make of such a relationship? And do you believe we can be happy together? R. C.

Girl Is Harried By False Notion

DEAR R. C.: It seems to me your letter affords artless testimony that jealousy and fear are synonymous. Webster's defines jealousy thus: "Exacting exclusive devotion; intolerance of rivalry; distrustful, suspicious; disposed to suspect rivalry in matters of interest or affection."

Jealousy is fear of loss, and Scripture says—"Fear hath torment, but perfect love casteth out fear."

In relation to Lew you are uneasy because, so far as you can see, he seems unafraid of losing you, and that's something you cannot understand—because you have a notion that human love is a form of conquest and subjugation, with one party in power and the other enslaved, and the latter liable to be cast into outer darkness at any time, i. e., when, as or if the victor gets bored with the victim.

As it happens, your misconcept of "true love" is held by a great many people, all of whom suffer accordingly, just as you do, in trying to protect their own hearts from hurt. Let's look at one instance of your behavior, to see how this misconcept drives you to punish and cheat yourself in relation to Lew.

One Should Love With Open Heart

WHEN he failed to arrive at an appointed time, you were gripped by anxiety as minutes passed, not with solicitude for his safety but with completely self-centered fear of rejection, fear that you weren't dominant in his life, that you were being treated as a doormat, etc. And anxiety was soon translated into hostility, into the "proud" anger (vindictive and face-saving in character) which caused you to flounce off on a make-believe date,—to make him jealous too, you hoped.

The results of this maneuver were sadly negative for you, because of course you were miserable moping hours away out of Lew's reach, and more miserable yet on getting home—after this waste of time—to note that he seemed undisturbed by your mysterious absence. And you might have spared yourself this futile anguish by hopefully waiting his tardy arrival with open heart—a gesture that would have been much more likely to penetrate his customary armor of "disinterest."

There can hardly be love without pain or hurt, but to get the most out of love, one must be able to love without stint and without canny defense—when the terms of the gift are honorable. M. H.

Use Cookie Cutter for Making Square Doughnuts

Doughnut dough is always hard to handle and if you get exasperated each time because the doughnuts are not perfectly round, try cutting them in diamond shapes with your cookie cutter, thus doing away with the hole entirely. They are just as good to eat and much easier to handle.

Tired of Utility' Little Woman Speaks Her Mind

By Peggy Preston

DEAR SANTA:

Well, everything is all set for you—or almost, that is.

For the past month I've been flirting with a complete nervous breakdown preparing for your visit. Everyone in the family is taken care of now, right down to my half sister-in-law. All you have to do is deliver the goods at the right time. If your fans aren't satisfied with their gifts this year it isn't my fault.

And now, how about me? What am I going to get out of all this? If you let me in for a pair of hose and "something practical for the house" again, I'll scream. I'm giving you fair warning, Santa old boy, unless you do better by me this year, our relationship is going to suffer a serious setback.

Wants to Feel Extravagant

NOW THIS is what I have in mind. For Christmas I want something I wouldn't think of buying for myself. It must be very lush and glamorous, and make me feel luxurious and extravagant when I wear it.

Actually, if you are having budget trouble, I'll settle for a lovely, filmy slip of nylon, lace flounced at the hem . . . or a pair of pretty house slippers, with bright beading on the toes . . . a small bottle of good French perfume . . . a delicate little velvet evening purse.

Six Shopping Days Left

BUT, ON THE OTHER HAND, I could really go for:

A stunning housecoat of brocade or velvet. Saw one the other day of nylon velvet. Pale blue it was, and washable, if you please!

Lounging pajamas so well cut I could wear them to an informal dinner at home.

Back in the lingerie department, I'd like a truly beautiful nightgown, maybe in black nylon or pure silk, with negligee to match.

Or, perhaps, a pair of Dior's handsome gloves, a little mink tippet; a leather lined alligator bag; a wisp of an evening hat.

See what I mean? Something that is not functional. Give me a hand, will you Santa? There are six whole shopping days left till Christmas and there is no law against wishing.

Hopefully yours,
THE LITTLE WOMAN

By Tom Kelley—The Washington Post

JUST one week from today the packages will be opened and Christmas will be in full swing. Maybe your gift box will contain one of the luxury gifts pictured here, which were featured at a holiday fashion show at the Mayflower Hotel. At left is a rich brocade housecoat, with a tailored belt circling the bodice above a full, gathered skirt. Colors are pale blue and pink. Negligee, at center, is of brandy colored chiffon velvet, fashioned with a drop shoulder line and satin sash which laces through the midriff. It is matched with a gown of apricot hued satin. Companion pieces to the housecoat are at right. A bell-shaped tunic of the same brocade is worn over black satin pajamas. Available at Jelleff's.

Adm. Struble's Daughter To Be Ensign's Bride

VICE ADMIRAL ARTHUR DEWEY STRUBLE, Deputy Chief of Naval Operations, and Mrs. Struble, entertained a small group of friends at cocktails yesterday to announce the engagement of their daughter, Elizabeth, to Ensign Ralph E. Wilson, jr., USN, son of Capt. R. E. Wilson, USN, and Mrs. Wilson. Captain Wilson is in command of the USS Worcester.

Miss Struble attended Mount Vernon Seminary and spent her freshman and sophomore years at Scripps College at Claremont, Calif. She is in her senior year at Goucher College, Baltimore.

The Service Set

Families Planning to Unite for Traditional Festivities at Christmas . . .

By Norma Lanum

"WE'RE just turning the holidays over to the children."

That's a popular refrain this year among Washington's service families, with most couples planning to sit back and enjoy the holidays at home while the young set takes in all the parties.

Over at the quarters of the Marine Corps Commandant and Mrs. Clifton B. Cates, plans are under way for their daughter Ann's debut dance December 30.

"That doesn't leave me time for anything else," confesses pretty Mrs. Cates.

Her cousin, Mrs. John Wintersteen of Philadelphia, will give Ann a dinner at the Carlton before the debut party. Following the dance General and Mrs. Cates will have just one day to get the furniture back into the quarters before their annual New Year's Day reception the following morning.

Marine Band to Serenade

That's when the red-jacketed Marine Corps band serenades the Commandant outside his quarters and then comes in for an informal party.

The Arthur Dewey Strubles plan a quiet holiday. As quiet as can be, that is, with three little boys at hand. The three grandsons of the Deputy Chief of Naval Operations and Mrs. Struble will be visiting them between Christmas and New Year's, and things are apt to be pretty lively at the admiral's Chevy Chase home.

The boys are Dewey, 4½ years; Denny, 3 years, and Dale, 7 months—the children of Lieut. Arthur D. Struble, jr., a student at the Naval Post Graduate School at Annapolis, and Mrs. Struble.

Schoeffel Family to Gather

Rear Admiral Malcolm Francis Schoeffel will be home for Christmas, too. He's been on sea duty for the past two years and is now based at Quonset, R. I. But he has leave over the holidays.

So the Schoeffel family will be complete—or near complete. The Schoeffels' daughter Sally won't be able to make it home. She's training horses on a Montana beef range and can't make it home until May when her brother, Peter, is to be graduated from St. James College.

Helping to share the holiday with the Schoeffels, however, will be their lifelong friends, Mr. and Mrs. Nils Riffolt of Dahlgren, Va. Also, the Riffolts' daughter and son-in-law, Dr. and Mrs. Robert Varney of Washington University, St. Louis, and their 4-month-old baby girl.

Ready for Yule Feast

Brig. Gen. and Mrs. Dudley Brown plan to come up from Quantico, Va., for Christmas eve dinner with Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Oliver P. Smith at their quarters in the Marine Barracks.

Another family gathering over the Yule season will take place at the Fort McNair quarters of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. Arthur W. Vanaman, USAF. Their daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. James Newell O'Gorman, are coming down from their New York home. Jim O'Gorman teaches at Columbia University and his wife, Mary, is on the editorial staff of Time magazine.

Christmas guests of Maj. Gen. and Mrs. David M. Schlatter, USAF, will include the former's sister and brother-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Chesley of Fostoria, Ohio. The Schlatters' daughter, Elizabeth Anne, got home Saturday night from Duke University where she is a freshman, and Cadet David, jr., is due back from West Point Thursday.

Capt. and Mrs. Donald Gruenther and their two baby boys will come down from West Point to spend the holidays with the captain's parents, Lieut. Gen. and Mrs. Alfred M. Gruenther.

Miss Delafield Becomes Bride In New York

Miss Julia Livingston Delafield, daughter of Mrs. Joseph Livingston Delafield of New York and the late Mr. Delafield, was married yesterday in New York City to Victor Henderson Sutro of Washington. The bridegroom is the son of Victor Sutro of New York and Florence, Italy, and the late Mrs. Sutro.

The ceremony took place at Grace Church at Broadway and Tenth st., with the Rev. Dr. Louis W. Pitt officiating. The bride, given in marriage by her brother, Joseph Livingston Delafield, was costumed in Italian silk and heirloom lace.

Her sister, Miss Harriet L. Delafield, was maid of honor and Peter C. Sutro was his brother's best man. The ushers included Charles B. Ripley, William C. Dickerman, Peter Henderson, William M. Henderson, Ogden W. Sutro, Samuel Thorne, jr., J. de Graffenried Graves and Williams S. Delafield.

A reception followed at the home of the bride's aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Benson B. Sloan. On return from a wedding trip to Italy, the couple will reside in Washington.

Bride of Aviator

Diplomat's Daughter Wed in Cathedral

MISS Elizabeth Gerard Merchant, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Livingston T. Merchant, and Lieut. Charles R. Leutz, jr., USMC, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Leutz of New York, were married yesterday in Bethlehem Chapel of the Washington Cathedral.

The service at 4:30 p. m. was read by Canon Crawford Brown assisted by the Rev. Thomas Mutch. A reception at the bride's home followed.

Mr. Merchant gave his daughter in marriage. She wore a gown of Chinese satin brocade with an antique Spanish lace mantilla, and carried a prayerbook with a spray of camellias and a shower of lilies of the valley.

Miss Mary Merchant was maid of honor for her sister, and other attendants were Miss Elizabeth Mutch of Morristown, N. J.; Miss Nina Bartram of Greenwich, Conn.; Miss Louise Reece of Johnson City, Tenn., Miss Lilian Leutz of Forest Hills, N. Y. and Miss Betty Bronder of Washington.

Groom's Attendants

DONALD M. LEUTZ of Forest Hills was best man. Ushers included Clarke Thornton of Baltimore; Capt. James C. Riffle, USMC, of Cherry Point, N. C.; Lieut. Nelson E. Brown and Lieut. Richard Bell.

After a wedding trip Lieutenant Leutz and his bride will go to Cherry Point, where the bridegroom is stationed.

The bride attended Holton Arms School and Holton Arms Junior College. She was graduated from Miss Porter's School, Farmington, Conn. and studied at the Corcoran School of Art. Her father, member of the Foreign Service, recently returned from Nanking, China, were he served as Counselor of the American Embassy, and is now Deputy Assistant Secretary of State.

Stiles Granddaughter

THE BRIDE is the granddaughter of the late Dr. Charles Wardell Stiles and Mrs. Stiles of Washington, and of the late Mr. and Mrs. Huntington Wolcott Merchant of New York.

Lieutenant Leutz joined the Navy in 1942, was commissioned in the Marine Corps as a Naval Aviator in 1943 and served in the American Embassy in Nanking from 1946 to 1949.

Makins Hold Yuletide Party For Children

The season to be jolly was ushered in yesterday at the Australian Embassy's annual Christmas party for children. Mrs. Makin, wife of the Ambassador, and her grandson, Kent Makin of Auckland, New Zealand, gave the party together, while the Ambassador looked in on the festivities late in the afternoon.

Mothers of the young guests did not attend; instead, wives of embassy staff members assisted with introductions and entertainment. Santa Claus arrived at the party heavily laden, and while his gifts were distributed around a tree, tea was served with ice cream and cakes.

As a final touch to a highly successful party, the film, "Teddy Bear Picnic" was shown. There were scenes of an Australian baby koala bear scampering about, set to music. After the baby koala climbed on his mother's back and said good night, the film ended, and guests at the embassy party took their departure with bows and curtsies.

THE Swedish Ambassador, Erik Boheman, takes time for tea with his family in the embassy library. His daughter, Mona, age 16, stands by his side, and Mme. Boheman shares the sofa with her little son, Anders, age 3. Majong, a well-mannered little Peke, takes his sugar without tea. The library is furnished in handsome Italian pieces with yellow upholstery. On one wall is a heavily carved wooden plaque from a fourteenth century church on the Black Sea, in Trebizon, Turkey, and the mirror over the fireplace is from Italy

Charm Predominates at Residence Of Swedish Ambassador's Family

This is the seventh of a series of articles on embassy homes, hosts and hostesses.

By Elizabeth Maguire

BEAUTY is the most noticeable quality in the Boheman family. The Ambassador of Sweden and Mme. Erik Boheman are a photogenic couple, and their two children, Mona and Anders, are lovely. Everything about the family has charm—their voices, their clothes, their home, even their ancestors.

With her own unerring taste, Mme. Boheman has furnished the embassy drawing room and, of course, it is perfection. Of tremendous size, the floor is completely covered with a jade green carpet, the walls are off-white, almost a pale lime, and the long French windows are covered with sheer white and draped in off-white satin.

Small pieces of French furniture, upholstered in off-white brocade, give an air of elegance and the walls are hung with tapestries and portraits by celebrated artists. Best-loved article in the room is a photograph of Prince Carl Gustaf, who will be four in April.

"Sweet boy," smiles the Ambassador, "he is going to be King of Sweden once." And Mona's comments fondly, "Isn't he cute?"

Pictures of Royalty

There are also photographs of King Gustaf V who is 91, of Crown Prince Gustaf Adolf, age 67, and of Queen Ingrid of Denmark, sister of little Carl Gustaf's father, who was killed in an airplane accident two years ago.

The Boheman family is trilingual. They were all born in Sweden, so they speak Swedish, and the Ambassador's last two posts were in Paris and London, so the children speak English or French as easily as Swedish.

If the family were in Sweden this Christmas they would most certainly gather at their farm, Anneberg, in the hilly lake country of Sweden some 200 miles south of Stockholm. The manor house was built by the Ambassador's great grandfather, and the estate is covered with 700 acres of forest. Swedish red cattle are raised on the farm, and Mona has ample opportunity here to get on her favorite horse and go on long rides with her father.

Former Cavalry Officer

Besides serving as Ambassador to France, Great Britain and the United States, and as minister to a number of other countries, Erik Boheman served as Secretary of State for his country during the war. He received his law degree in Stockholm, and during the first World War he was an officer in the cavalry.

He knows his country well—the tall dark forests where the Laps dwell, the iron ore mines of the north, the Orrefors and Kosta glass factories in Smalamb Province, and the forest-covered mountains of central Sweden, and the flat dairy country in the south.

When the Bohemans move to a new post their furniture goes with them. The handsome embassy at 2249 R st. is almost completely furnished with their own things and is one of the loveliest in Washington. Mme. Boheman never consults an interior decorator, so the house really reflects her taste.

The entrance hall and wide marble staircase are carpeted in soft blue, and the walls of the stairwell are lined with blue seascapes, a gift of former Minister to Sweden, Robert Woods Bliss. There is a portrait in the hall of a dashing ancestor of the Ambassador who was a favorite in court circles and a portrait of King Charles XII, Sweden's great conqueror, also hangs in the hall.

Mme. Boheman is medium tall and slim, she is as pretty as she can be, and she dresses beautifully. Jacques Fath is her favorite couturier and Maugain is next. Daughter Mona is 16. She has her mother's lovely profile and she is very attractive. A student at Mount Vernon Seminary. Her chief hobbies are acting and riding.

Little Anders, youngest member of the family, is just 3. He is blond, has apple red cheeks, and his most devoted playmate is a well mannered little Peke named Majong.

Ready for Yule Feast

When the two join the family circle for tea, Anders takes hot water and milk, and Majong chomps on sugar lumps.

Christmas dinner at the Swedish Embassy will probably start with lutsisk fish, followed by baked ham and a number of smorgasbord dishes including herring, mushrooms a la king, and kidney stew.

Aquavit will be served and the final course will be rice porridge. Later in the evening there will be sweets and hot gloegg.

A VIEW in the hallway of the Swedish Embassy. The floors are carpeted in soft blue and the staircase is white. On the walls hang an ascending series of eight gouaches, presented in 1938 by Robert Woods Bliss, former United States Minister to Sweden, to the then Minister of Sweden to the United States, Wolmar Bostrom. Mr. Bliss has also presented to the embassy an oil painting by the late Prince Eugene, brother of the King of Sweden.

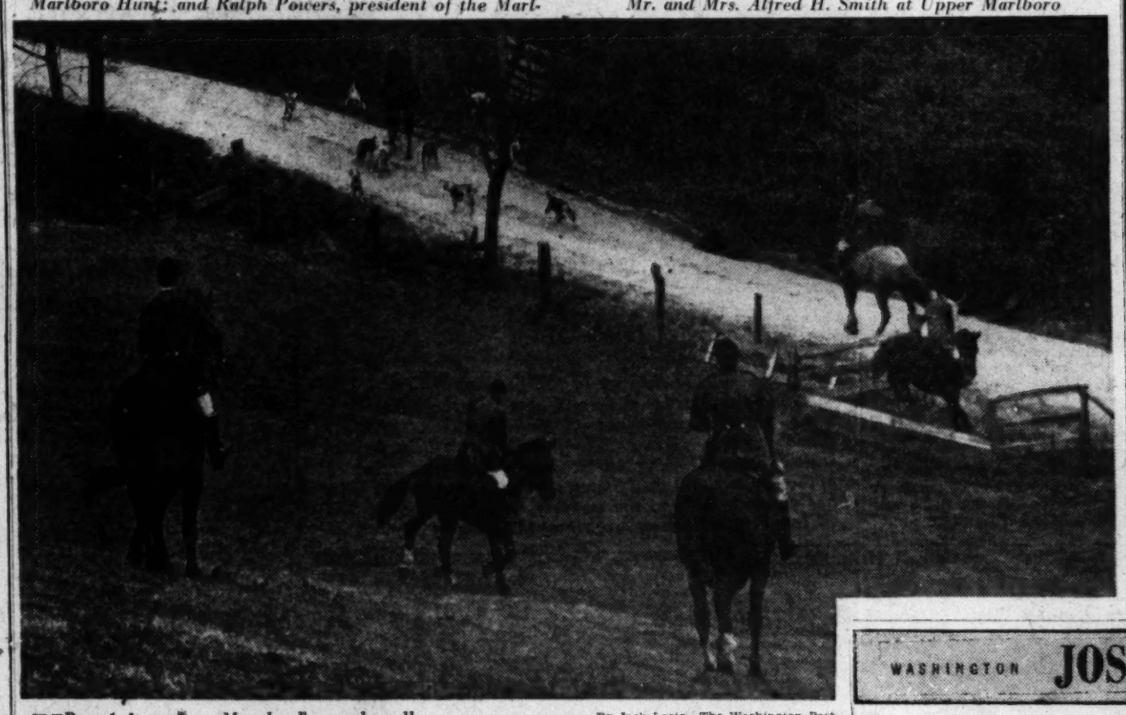
Hoist the Stirrup Cup, Then Tally-ho! Two Great Hunts Are Riding to Hounds

THERE'S more to the hunt than the chase . . . the traditional stirrup cup toast before mounting the steeds . . . the hunt breakfast following the chase . . . and, of course, those colorful "pink" jackets, top hats and embroidered symbols of the clubs. That's how it was when the Marlboro Hunt Club met with the Potomac Club on December 10

MIRRORED faces at the bar are, left to right: Mrs. F. Moran McConhie of the Potomac Hunt, Albert Lindstrom, of Fredericksburg, Va.; Richard Zantzinger, of the Marlboro Hunt; and Ralph Powers, president of the Marlboro Hunt. They drink a "stirrup cup" before setting off for the combined Marlboro and Potomac hunt meet last Saturday. The group met first at Blythewood, home of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred H. Smith at Upper Marlboro



UP and down over Maryland's gently rolling countryside members of the two hunts follow the hounds in pursuit of Reynard. After the hunt the riders met for a hunt breakfast at the Patuxent Gun Club.

Miss Doris O'Donnell Is Presented at Tea

MRS. DORIS FLEESON presented her daughter, Miss Doris O'Donnell, yesterday at a tea at her house in Georgetown. The debutante wore an amethyst taffeta frock, new short length, with green orchids and antique amethyst jewelry, and her mother was gowned in bronze green satin with bronze orchids.

Guests were received in the drawing room between 5 and 7 o'clock. A fire was glowing on the hearth, and flowers sent to the debutante decorated the room. Mr. and Mrs. J. Addison Robb, jr., of New York assisted in receiving.

The debutante was graduated from the St. Catherine's School in Richmond, and she is now a freshman at Vassar, majoring in modern languages and music. Another party for younger people will be given by Mrs. Fleeson for her daughter in June.

Assisting the debutante's mother at yesterday's tea were Mrs. Georgia Neese Clark, Treasurer of the United States, Mrs. Gould Lincoln, Mrs. May Craig, Mrs. J. K. Vardaman, and Miss Helen Fuller.

Bow Hats Are Beaux-Catchers

I think every woman in the world wants something new to wear for Christmas or New Year's—a dress, an evening gown or a pretty new hat. Some years I have no time to fit a dress, but I always buy a holiday hat!

The gayest new hats are real beau-catchers, all trimmed with the prettiest ribbon bows. The hats themselves are simple little felts in delicious color pastels or white. Sometimes the bows are of matching satin or taffeta ribbon—crisp and very perky. More often they contrast—sometimes using two colors to accent the color of the felt—as coral and soft lime green on a champagne color hat, or mink brown on pastel blue to wear with a mink coat.

Rules for Initialing Silver for the Bride

Initial code: Proper initialing of silverware follows a rigid code. The rules are: On silver acquired before the engagement, the bride's own family initial; on wedding gifts, or acquired after marriage, the husband's family initial if only one is desired. For three-letter initials after marriage, the order is: Bride's given name, her family name, husband's family name.

Candy for Christmas

Recipes for Tasty Holiday Sweets

By Lucia Brown

COOKING is almost as much fun as eating when there's Christmas candy at home on your range!

Whipping up delectable batches of fudge, nougat and nut brittle is part of the Yuletide fun. If the whole family joins in, you can make enough sweets in one evening to last through the holidays and treat your friends as well.

Most families have their own particular candy favorites — treats grandmother used to make, perhaps, special goodies that are enjoyed Christmas after Christmas. It's always fun, though, to introduce a few new items to vary the theme. Below we give recipes for some you may or may not have tried.

But first, a few general tips on successful candymaking:

1. In beating candy, use a heavy wooden spoon and beat vigorously. Never use a rotary beater unless this is definitely specified.

2. In making the "soft ball" test for doneness, use cold water to drop a small amount of the candy in. Remove pan from fire while you're making the test so that candy will not cook more until you're sure it needs it. If you can't gather candy into small ball with your fingers after it's been dropped in cold water, continue cooking.

3. If fudge cooks too hard, break it up, add just enough liquid to melt it without burning, and recook to correct temperature.

4. Use heavy saucepan for candymaking. If you do much candymaking, try to keep utensils for this specific work, as sugar readily absorbs other cooking favors.

5. In greasing slab, pans, or plates for candy, use cooking oil instead of butter because it is bland and does not contain the salt and moisture butter does.

PECAN BRITTLE

2 cups sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
¼ teaspoon soda
1 teaspoon vanilla
2 cups pecans

Heat sugar slowly in a smooth skillet. Stir constantly with bowl of spoon until a golden sirup is formed. Remove from heat and quickly stir in salt, soda, and vanilla. Pour sirup over a layer of nuts in a greased pan. When cold, crack into pieces.

COCONUT MARSHMALLOW DELIGHTS

½ pound marshmallows
¼ pound (1¼ cups) walnut halves
1½ cups shredded coconut

Melt marshmallows in top of double boiler. Dip nuts in marshmallow, coating well. Roll in coconut, tinted if desired. To tint coconut, dilute a small amount of food coloring and sprinkle it over coconut in a glass jar. (Fill jar only about half full). Cover jar and shake vigorously until coloring is evenly distributed and desired shade is obtained.

SPICED FILBERTS

2 cups toasted filberts
1 cup sugar
5 tablespoons water
1 tablespoon cinnamon
1 teaspoon vanilla
Few grains salt

Toast filberts by placing in a 275-degree Fahrenheit oven for 20 minutes. Rub to partially remove brown skins. Combine sugar, water, cinnamon and salt. Bring to a boil and boil for 2 minutes. Remove from heat, add filberts and vanilla, and stir until sirup looks cloudy. Place on waxed paper or greased platter and when cool, break apart.

TRUFFLES AU CHOCOLAT
(Chocolate Truffles)

6 ounces chocolate
½ cup butter
1 cup confectioner's sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
Cocoa

Melt chocolate and butter in top of double boiler. Add sugar and stir until sugar and butter are well blended. Add vanilla and, if the mixture is too dry, a little cream. It should be firm and moist enough to form into small balls. Roll the little balls in cocoa and place in individual candy papers.

SOUR-CREAM CANDY

3 cups brown sugar
1 cup sour cream
¼ cup butter
1 teaspoon vanilla extract
1 cup chopped English walnuts
Salt

Combine the sugar and cream and cook to 240 degrees or to the soft ball stage. Remove from the heat. Add a pinch of salt and the butter. Beat until mixture begins to grain. Stir in vanilla extract and the nut meats and pour in buttered pan.

For the loveliest Christmas ever - JANDEL MINK

Jandel mink—infinitely precious to the female heart—is today the timeliest gift of all! Timely, because Jandel prices, in the face of a rising skin market, are unusually low . . . and will probably be higher in 1950. Timely, because mink this season is the height of fur fashion—more important than ever before. Timely, too, because Jandel's comprehensive collection includes the newest mutations . . . all wonderfully worked in so many different styles from small stoles to greatcoats . . . and each with the inimitable Jandel Touch!

School Days Golden Before Holidays

By Alzene LaBell

SCHOOL days, school days, dear old golden rule days . . . especially now during the preholiday season. Just read what's happened this past week and what's in store for next—and don't forget lessons galore! Goodness!

ON MONDAY, THE 12th, the Fairfax High School Student Government entertained the County Student Government Association at an all-day meeting. Billy Hicks, local student council president, Mary Joyce Rowland, Audrey Wright, Ann Bender and Willis Alves were hosts and, last but not least, our own Calvert Clingenpell, who is president of the Fairfax County Student Government Association.

The county high schools attending and their representative students were: Herndon: Margo Calvert, Norma Mohler and Jean Keller: Mount Vernon: Lois Malpass, Shirley Weaver, Peggy Showalter, Bob Sparks, Kenneth Everitt and Jerry Sare; Falls Church: Pat Salleman, Tallie Hagood, Sheila Bell, Alice Knight, Tom Porter, Bill May and Chip Porter.

The County Student Government Association decided to put on a variety and talent show January 28th at 8 o'clock in the Fairfax High auditorium. Each of the four high schools will furnish the talent for one act. The proceeds will be used for the Fairfax County basketball tournament the first week in March.

After the business meeting the guests were entertained by a one-act comedy, "Elmer," given by the following members of the dramatic class: Jimmy Miller, Ann Utterback, Bernice Magruder, Marlene Williams, Brent Higginbotham and Roland Harris, under the direction of Miss Marjorie French.

The purpose of the association is to promote goodwill and fellowship in the county schools and was fostered by a Fairfax High School boy, Murray Downs, six years ago. Downs is now a student at the University of Edinburgh on a Virginia State Rotary scholarship.

ON TUESDAY AFTERNOON, THE 13th, a fashion show was held in the auditorium and sponsored by Mrs. Alma Schrock, head of the home economics department, and assisted by Miss Dorothy Billings. Student chairman was Margaret Uhler. Twenty girls modeled clothes. A bit of spice was added to the glamour parade by the boys who acted as escorts to the girls. Guests were parents of the home economics department students. After the show tea was served.

WEDNESDAY EVENING, THE 14th, the first meeting of the school P-TA, with the new officers in charge, took place in the school auditorium at 8 p. m. The new staff consists of A. B. Murphy, president; Mrs. A. B. Halsinger, secretary, and J. T. Hubbard, treasurer. W. H. Edmonton, director of physical education, spoke on the purpose of gym training in the school.

Following the meeting, basketball was provided for the amusement of the P-TA, between the faculty team and the varsity team. Faculty members participating were William Edmonston, James Leavitt, Lee Miles, Ralph Lewis, Rayburn Williams, Blain Friedlander, Emory Chesley and Craighill Burks.

ON THURSDAY EVENING, THE 15th, the Junior Honor Society members were guests of the Gamma Sigma Honor Society at a Christmas party in the school band room. Only 10 percent of the senior class are eligible for the honor roll and the lucky six are Ann Bender, Jeanne Jacques, Billy Hicks, Page Murphy, Brent Higginbotham and Calvert Clingenpell. Miss Mary Katherine Kern sponsored the party, which was enjoyed in real holiday spirit.

ON SATURDAY NIGHT, THE 17th, the high school glee club sponsored a formal dance called the "Snow Ball" under the patronage of Miss Geraldine Estep, vocal teacher. The gymnasium was gayly festooned in the best Christmas tradition with decorations of colored balloons, green and white paper streamers and Christmas trees. Music was provided by Tommy Virden and his orchestra of Washington and Lee High School. A snow queen was crowned without benefit of snow. Joint Chairman Billie Rae Brownell had as her committee the following: Ann Redkey, decorations; Emily Person and Ann Sproud, program and toys. The list of needy families will be furnished by Miss Mary Beacham of the Fairfax County Welfare Department. The Christmas boxes will be turned over to the welfare department by Ann Bender, secretary of public relations of the Student Government Association.

Also scheduled for this date is a midday special Christmas dinner at the school cafeteria, under the direction of Mrs. Martha Dove of school cafeteria and Mrs. Alma Schrock of home economics department.

The Family Scrapbook

By Dr. Ernest G. Osborne

Are Christmas carols an important part of your family's holiday celebration? Of course, you hear them over the radio or at pre-Christmas church services. But do you sing them together? Have you collected records of the ones you like best? Have families in your neighborhood ever formed caroling groups that serenade through the nearby streets? Have your younger children learned the old and beloved Christmas songs?

We have a very pleasant custom in the apartment house where our children have grown up. Each Christmas morning at 8 o'clock, a small group gathers on the top floor. A portable organ is used and the program starts with an old favorite. After all the verses have been sung, the group moves down to the next floor. As they go from one floor to the other, they are joined by other residents. By the time we reach the fifth or sixth, there are babies in arms, small fry, youngsters of high-school age, young people home from college, dads and mothers, grandpas and grandmas all singing together. Some songs are kept for youngsters alone to sing. It's a lot of fun.

Ever See a Dream Walking?

Pajamas Snazzy for Snoozing

By Gregory Carmichael

BIRTHDAY suits are not considered the best possible form for informal lounge wear after—say, a man's first birthday. Which leads to the conclusion that good-looking pajamas make a first rate gift for any gentleman over that age on your Christmas list.

Nothing is better received for Christmas than a fine pair of highly styled, quality woven pajamas. They're distinctive for home wear, comfortable at all times, and absolutely indispensable for out-of-town vacations.

Just in time for holiday buying comes a pip of a pajama which positively guarantees to do away with drooping shoulders, hike-up fronts, overlapping trousers, or highwater legs. As a matter of fact, when making a purchase for a friend, you don't even have to be too careful about his pajama size; simply take a guess at his general dimensions and pick up a pair of pajamas which have the intriguing trade-name "Adjusto-Cuffs." They've designed to fit almost any man, providing you know his approximate height and color choice.

As an added attraction, Adjusto-Cuffs have a handsome gift card attached to every garment.

Plenty of Variety This Year

SNAPPY pajamas come in almost every style and variety of color this year and there's such a brilliant range of designs that even your most discerning friend can't help finding something to suit his taste. Firms which feature British imports are showing "tailor cut" pajamas which look for all the world like ordinary suits of clothing—except for a difference in weights and material.

For men who persistently maintain that pajamas are "extras," designed to drain the purse and establish a sleeping precedent, I need only point out that pajamas for men were an established "precedent" as far back as 1123 A. D.! To be sure, King Henry II refused to wear them, but members of his royal court wore them secretly and with uncommon good taste—considering the fact that they lived in the twelfth century!

Later on the more warm-blooded Elizabethans dispensed with the services of pajamas for sleeping altogether, but wore "bedclothes" to even the best parties. This they did with true Falstaffian relish, and good Queen Bess often held open court in a night dress.

Make Debut at Fair

THE STORY goes that pajamas were first formally introduced to society at England's traditional St. Bartholomew's Fair, to induce a freer flow of dollars. Samuel Pepys bought pajamas for his friends at every fair, and if you'll dissect a bit of history concerning the personal wardrobe of bonny King Charles II you'll discover that he actually bragged about having an entire closetful of pajamas.

Getting back to the twentieth century for just a minute, it's agreeable to report that the new pajamas being offered as gifts today have a finer "feel" about them than ever before. It's this intangible quality, plus shrinkage reliability, which has established a new pajama reputation which is being upheld by millions of satisfied sleepers all over the country.

Take a look at the block stripe poplin pajamas which feature a girdle waist and a jacket which buttons clear to the neck. Or finger a hand-blocked silk printed foulard houserobe and pajama combination which boasts of small stand-out printed figures.

Self-color satin stripes on two-fold poplin make for unusually attractive pajama appeal. The range in this pajama includes almost every imaginable shade—pastels and solids.

Broadcloth always wears well; it's easy to clean and it's markedly masculine. Cotton goods used to shrink, but the National Cotton Council has launched an all-out campaign to prove that new cottons, pre-shrunk—are far more washable, serviceable, durable, and comfortable. What more can a man ask!

Novelty nightclothes aren't as popular as they used to be, but a good number of men feel that pajamas still lack that certain "touch" of imagination. For these individualistic few there's a store here in Washington which paints special "scenes" on the pockets and backs of pajama shirts. These gift items make a special hit with the guy who goes along with a gag.

Outdated Superstition

Outmoded spook: Finally laid to rest is the ancient superstition that a bride should use a stand-in for her wedding rehearsal. Bosh! She should scorn the tabu and go.

How to Make Christmas Tree White

With Christmas coming so soon, could you help me find a method of making Christmas trees white so it would look like the lovely ones used in store decorations? They seem to be thick with something that looks the same as a real tree in the north woods. C. M. R.

Christmas trees can be made beautifully white by spraying them with casein paint. Make the paint a little thinner than you would for wall application and spray it on with a paint sprayer or with a hand spray which is used for spraying insecticides.

If you wish to add glitter, sprinkle fireproof Santa Claus snow on the boughs while the paint is still wet.

Please give directions for making an orange sachet, using an orange and cloves stuck into it. Is there any preparation for the orange? A DAILY READER.

Stick whole cloves into the orange so closely that it is completely covered. Now, dust the orange with orris root and let stand a few days. If you wish, you can tie a colorful ribbon four ways around the orange for hanging in the closet.

I have hunted my cook books over, but cannot find a recipe for Sea Foam candy. Will you please print one in your column? A. J.

You will find Sea Foam called Divinity in most cook books. Here is a recipe:

2½ cups sugar
¼ teaspoon salt
2/3 cup light corn syrup
½ cup water
2 egg whites, stiffly beaten
1 teaspoon vanilla
Nuts, if desired

Combine sugar, salt, corn syrup and water; cook over low heat, stirring constantly until sugar is dissolved and mixture boils. Continue cooking at 265 degrees F. without stirring until small amount of syrup forms a hard ball in cold water. Wipe away crystals from sides of pan with a damp cloth.

Pour slowly over egg whites, beating constantly, and continue beating until candy holds its shape when dropped from spoon; mix in vanilla. Turn into buttered plate and cut in squares, or drop by spoonfuls on buttered surface.

Where may we take children's slightly broken or used toys—the Fire Department? Isn't there some place that repairs and distributes them where they would bring some happiness? G. W. H.

The firemen of the District do repair toys for redistribution at Christmas time. I suggest you take your toys to the engine house.

Can you give me any information as to where I can get ideas how to make paper things for Christmas trees and to decorate Christmas packages? Anything at all that is done with scissors, paste and paper. T. R.

Cornucopias made of colorful paper are most attractive decorations for Christmas trees. To make them, cut a 9-inch square of white flexible cardboard and roll into a cone. Fasten the edges together with paste or scotch tape. Trim cone at top to even. Cone can be decorated by running strips of red and green scotch tape spirally the length of it. Place hole in top for a string to hang it. Or, the cone could be colored by covering it with transparent red or green cellophane. Another way to decorate it would be to draw or paste Christmasy pictures on it from used Christmas cards. Hang cone on tree and fill it with candy, popcorn, or light gifts.

Another paper decoration is made with loops of one fourth inch paper pasted so they interlock and form a chain. Using gold and silver gift wrapping paper for the chains makes them especially nice.

A decoration for packages which can be quickly made is one which uses cellophane sipping straws. Hold about 50 sipping straws tightly together in one hand with ends even. Now, wind cotton-covered wire twice around the center and pull hard on the wire. Fasten with a twist and knot. The tightening wire spreads the sipping straws in a pompom effect. Cut off ends of wire and tie cord or ribbon over the wire, leaving ends long enough to attach to the package.

Could you or anyone tell me where I can buy lingenberry jam—a Swedish jam? Is there a store or any place in the District of Columbia where I can buy some? My husband and I both love it and would like to have it for our Christmas dinner this year, but have been unable to find it. C. J. L.

I haven't been able to find any one who sells this delicacy. On grocer who sells imported foods said he had been trying to buy lingenberry or mountain cranberry jam for some of the embassies here but had been unsuccessful.

Attention, L. W. F. of Osso, Va., and A. L. C. of Arlington, who have asked for a recipe for Pizza Pie with cheese and tomatoes. Here is one which appeared in "Arts of Cheese Cookery," by Nilsa Standin (Doubleday & Co.). She says:

"Real pizza (which means pie) is made with bread dough. However, it tastes good if made with biscuit dough or biscuit mix. If biscuit dough is used, spread the dough very thin on the pie plate.

"Line a 9-inch pie plate with bread or biscuit dough. Brush generously with olive oil. Cover thickly with sliced mozarella or Jack cheese. You may use very new cheddar or a semihard Munter, but try to get mozarella. Cover cheese with fresh tomatoes cut in pieces, well drained canned tomatoes or tomato paste. Sprinkle salt, pepper, ½ grated onion (optional) and oregano (Italian name for wild marjoram). Oregano is optional in the recipe but very good.

"Brush with more olive oil. Cut a dozen anchovy fillets into small pieces and place on tomatoes. Bake in hot oven for 20 to 30 minutes."

Mrs. E. B. White Reelected President of Women's Auxiliary

Leesburg, Va., Dec. 17.—Mrs. E. B. White has been reelected president of the Woman's Auxiliary of St. James' Episcopal Church at the annual meeting Monday afternoon at the home of Mrs. J. Armistead Welbourn. Mrs. Charles W. Sydnor was cohostess.

Mrs. Thomas M. Fendall was named second vice president. Other officers reelected were Mrs. David N. Rust, jr., first vice president; Mrs. Edmond Noyes, secretary, and Mrs. Charles D. Lewis, treasurer.

The finance chairman reported that over $1300 has been made by the group during the year. The greater portion of this will go to mission work, both at home and abroad, with the largest share remaining in the diocese. A short pageant depicting the Christmas story was presented by the choir children under the direction of Mrs. Charles Lewis.

The January meeting of the group will be at the Triangle with the Misses Davis.

League Supports Clubhouse

Pentagon Wives Serve the GIs

By Genevieve Reynolds

FOR 50 years, enlisted men and veterans have dropped into the Soldiers, Sailors and Marines Club for Christmas dinner, a night's lodging or entertainment. When they gather this Yuletide to "shoot the breeze" or swap experiences, they'll be joined by the airmen.

To keep pace with the times and its needs, the club at its October board meeting added Airmen's to its title. It is owned and operated by the Woman's Army and Navy League.

The club grew out of the old Buffalo (N. Y.) Society. The women in the Buffalo Society used to send Bibles and literature to enlisted men aboard ships. Later they conceived the idea of further on-shore assistance to servicemen.

Grown With Years

CURRENTLY, the Soldiers, Sailors, Marines and Airmen's Club is being run exclusively for enlisted men and veterans of World War II.

From a small beginning at 317 C st. nw., where nine men could be lodged and served breakfast for 25 cents, the club has grown to fill spacious quarters at 1015 L st. nw. Now the enlisted man pays 85 cents a night for lodging and can obtain home-cooked meals at reasonable prices. Today approximately 2000 men sleep and eat there monthly.

Buildings Enlarged

DURING World War II the buildings were enlarged and renovated, and an annex was added to accommodate about 50 men. There is a fine library filled with the latest magazines, and with new and old books; a game room, a comfortable lounge equipped with huge easy chairs, radio and television. Former Secretary of the Navy and Mrs. John Nicholas Brown recently donated the television set.

In its early history the club obtained partial support through benefit balls, card parties, rummage sales and through donations.

For a few years the club received yearly contributions from the U. S. O., Community War Fund and United Community Services.

Last week the Army Quartermasters Wives gave the club a check for $1350 which had been raised at a bazaar. This sum will go toward endowment and maintenance of a bedroom in the club.

Boosts the GI

MRS. LUTHER SHELDON, a long-time ardent worker with the WANL, expresses the determination of league members to continue the club in a few lines she wrote recently.

"No matter what goes on in the Pentagon
And up upon the Hill
Our Club will stand
For the enlisted man
We're united for him still."

bassador Anderson and her husband return here, would be handy to know. Mr. Anderson is to be placed just below all heads of Missions which includes, naturally, such Charge d'Affaires as currently officiate.

General Bradley Poses Problem

MOST bothersome in these parts has been what to do with Gen. Omar Bradley after his elevation to a newly made job, chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Personally, the General confides, he'd rather sit at the bottom of the table "with the sergeants—because their talk is more interesting." Actually, though, he's fated to dinner-march right after such Ambassadors who may be present.

Unification got everyone down. For several weeks after Jim Forrestal's appointment as first Secretary of Defense, no one dared ask him around unless it was definitely bosom-of-the-family. Now, however, the Secretary of Defense rates where the Secretary of War used to, third in the Cabinet and preceded only by Secretaries Acheson and Snyder. Right now, protocol's lost child is the Undersecretary of Defense. Poor Steve Early, though his title was dreamed up last summer, nobody's yet figured what to do with him!

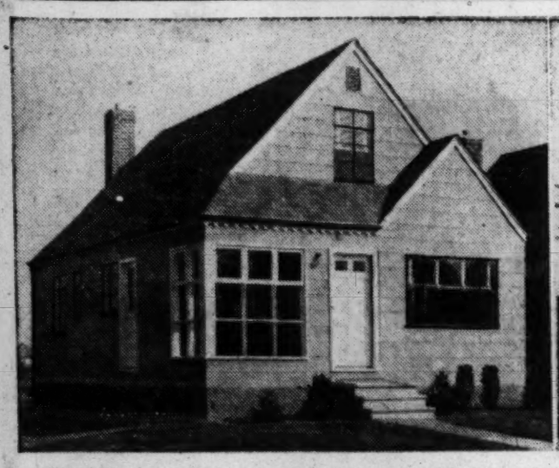
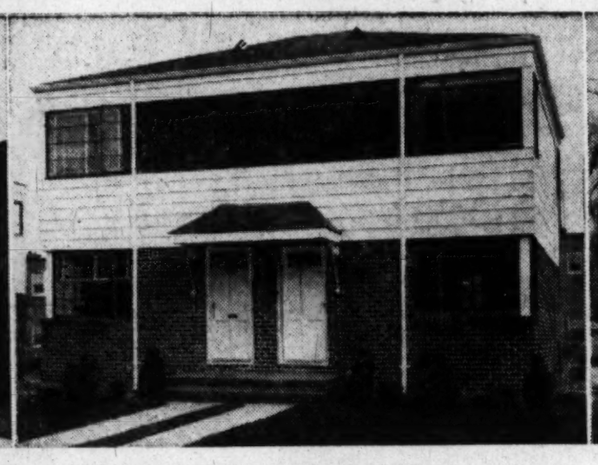
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, DECEMBER 18, 1949



Allied Beechurst Corp. called this their new California ranch type model. Over 100 homes were said to be sold before model house was opened in New York City. It is priced at $9990, contains 4½ rooms with expansion attic, full basement, on a 40 by 100 foot landscaped lot



Morton Brothers sold this semi-detached brick and frame house for $8999 per unit. The floor plan contains living room, dinette and kitchen on first floor, two bedrooms and bath on second floor. Project is located in Jamaica Estates, off Union Turnpike, in New York

Rear view of the popular model house at Levittown, Long Island. Window-wall is of Thermopane, self-insulating glass. The homes sold at $7990. The large glass area was used to create a feeling of indoor-outdoor living, according to Alfred S. Levitt, designer

Rear view of model house at Twinbrook, large housing project near Rockville, Md. Floor plan is somewhat similar to that of Levittown model house. Twinbrook house uses joist foundation construction, where Levitt uses concrete slab. Twinbrook homes sell from $9650 to $9800

Easier, Cheaper to Build in New York Than Here, Home Comparision Reveals

By Conrad P. Harness

DO NEW YORK home buyers get more for their housing dollars than Washington home buyers?

This interesting question was put to The Washington Post by Mrs. Gordon L. Tanner, 6829 Piney Branch rd. nw., following a visit with relatives in Levittown, Long Island, where Levitt & Sons has built thousands of attractive two-bedroom homes selling at $7990.

Mrs. Tanner wrote: ". . . we were thrilled over the model house . . . wonderful for that price. Here was something we liked at a price we could afford. A Levitt representative said the same house was being built near Washington but that it would cost almost $12,000. In the New York papers we saw any number of ads for houses under $8000—and I mean nice-looking houses."

Mrs. Tanner adds that homes here for $8000 are widely lacking in looks and other housing qualities, and wants to know what's happened to the cost of housing in Washington as compared to New York.

A call to Steve Thompson, real estate editor of the New York Herald-Tribune, resulted in pictures, floor plans and descriptions of 25 typical New York housing developments arriving on this reporter's desk on Thursday.

A study of these representative model homes, some of which are pictured here, reveals that in some cases New York builders have erected beautiful homes at very attractive price tags; some of the other homes suffer when compared to similar housing by local builders. All things considered, however, it seemed that New Yorkers were getting a little more for their money, especially at Long Island developments.

Roland Simon, executive with Twinbrook, Inc., developers of a large housing development near Rockville, Md., revealed some of the reasons why this is possible. Simon and other members of his firm made a detailed study of the Levitt development, later incorporating some of what they saw into model houses at Twinbrook. The move was successful, with 3* homes just completed and another group of 89 just starting—and no sales resistance yet encountered.

Comparing his model house at $9650 to the Levitt's $7990 home, Simon explained that Twinbrook paid "at least ten times as much per lot" as did the Levitt organization.

Levittown was built on flat, sandy soil, with inexpensive septic tank systems for each house, Simon declared. Twinbrook sites required topographic studies, expensive land development costs, storm drainage sewers, concrete gutters and curbs and roads built to rigid specifications.

ALTHOUGH BOTH HOMES are similar in appearance, Simon pointed out many interior differences. The Twinbrook house has the heating plant in the upstairs attic, providing space for an extra cabinet in the kitchen joints in the foundation construction instead of a concrete slab; oak flooring instead of asphalt tile; a larger kitchen, better grade of kitchen cabinets, plus innumerable structural differences.

Also, Simon continued, the Levitt organization, the biggest building concern in America, has its own forests, lumber mills, building material firm, plumbing company, etc., builds 4000 homes per year on a production line basis, thus gaining savings inherent in mass production. Smaller builders lose such savings, he added.

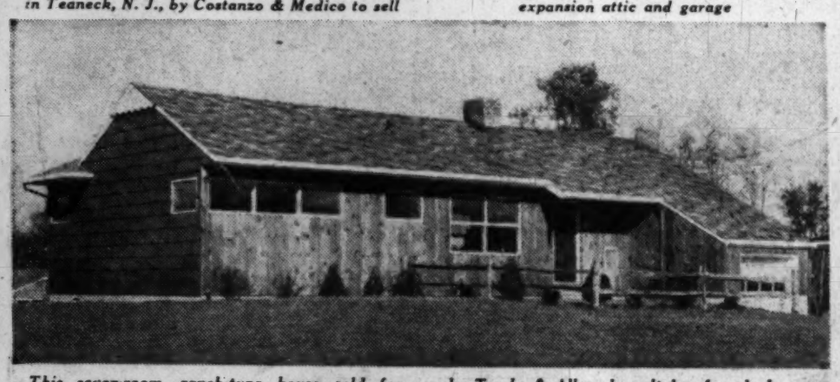
There's your answer, Mrs. Tanner, together with a representative array of New York model homes pictured here. The most interesting, and unanswered question remains (and we can't find anyone who knows the answer): What would the Levittown house cost here if erected by the Levitts?

Radiant Heating Gains Acceptance

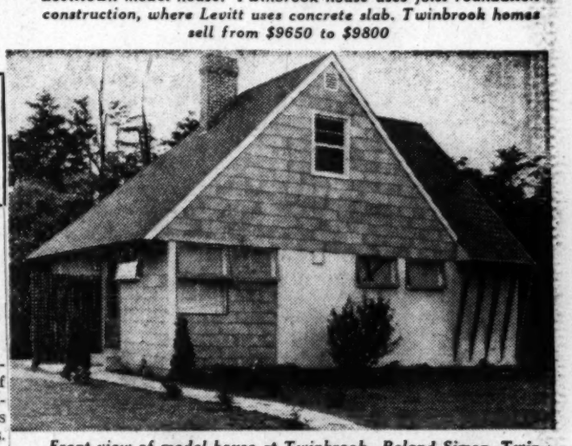
In a survey of more than 26,000 panel-heating installations by Architectural Forum magazine, it was found that 93 percent of the owners reported they would prefer panel heating if they were going to buy or build again, and 89 percent of those checked said panel heating gave more comfortable heat than other systems with which they were familiar and 57 percent listed "less dust as a feature."

Of the installations surveyed, 66 percent had floor panel heating systems: 30 percent ceiling, and 4 percent wall installations.

This center-hall entrance bungalow was erected in Teaneck, N. J., by Costanzo & Medico to sell at $15,990. It has two bedrooms, full basement, expansion attic and garage



This seven-room, ranch-type house sold for $18,000 in Saddle-Wood Hills, N. J., developed by Tandy & Allen, Inc. It has four bedrooms, is located on one-third acre. Front is of Idaho knotty pine



Front view of model house at Twinbrook. Roland Simon, Twinbrook official, said difference in price tags at Twinbrook and Levittown results from higher construction costs here, much higher land and land development costs, slightly larger house, better grade kitchen cabinets, various structural differences

Two-story home at New Hyde Park, Long Island, built by Klein & Teischolz to sell at $16,990 on a 60 by 100 foot lot. It has 1½ baths, 3 bedrooms, large kitchen with dining alcove, dining room, large living room and garage

Fireplace Bricks Can Be Cleaned Easily With Scouring Powder

Fireplace bricks that are discolored by smoke and soot can be cleaned with a stiff brush dipped in a paste of water and ordinary scouring powder, followed by a clear water rinse.

If the soot is so deeply embedded that this is not effective, a new clean surface can be obtained by rubbing the bricks with a carborundum stone, obtainable at hardware stores.

Cleaning should be an all-over job for uniform color and should be followed by repointing the joints with ready-mixed cement.

'Kind to Your Home' Week Coming Up?

BE kind to your house—it's probably older than you are.

More than half of the homes in the United States have passed their thirtieth birthday and in the District of Columbia alone there are over 102,838 homes in that category.

There are roughly 42 million homes in the United States. Of these 23 million—or 54 percent of the total—were built in 1920 or before, census figures show.

That means the chances are better than 50-50 that your home is obsolete in some respects and needs one or more of the improvements that bring about modernization.

The housewife probably is the first to be bothered by the trend toward obsolescence, finding her household chores harder and harder to do. Then the man of the house is likely to find a kind of creeping paralysis attacking the plumbing system or electrical equipment and, of course, property values, too.

For instance, a just-completed coal heating service inspection campaign in Minnesota shows that only one home heating system in 10 is in good condition.

A trade publication analyzed 27,000 furnace and boiler cleaning records to find that most home systems bad something wrong with them and that 7 per cent were definitely in need of replacement.

One coal company reported that 67 percent of all customer complaints are due to defective equipment. The Koppers company, reporting on 42,000 furnace inspections, says less than 10 percent of domestic heating plants appear to be in good condition.

An estimated 49,000 fires every year are due to defective or overheated heating equipment. Just as many more result from overheated chimneys and flues or sparks on the roof.

One sign of an up-to-date home is the automatically controled heating system. But Minneapolis-Honeywell Regulator Co. has released figures showing that only about eight million homes have them. That is less than one-in-five. And there are only about 100 million homes equipped with the newest thermostats that are operated by electronics.

Low Rental Project

Memphis, Tenn.—A 132-unit apartment project, with rentals ranging from $40 to $50 a month, has been placed under construction here. The project will have 32 one-bedroom units at rents of $40, 90 two-bedroom units at $47, and 10 three-bedroom units at $55.

Plans Shopping Center

Chevy Chase Land Co. has announced plans for a small shopping center at Connecticut ave. and Chevy Chase Lake, Md. Structure will be two stories and basement, of brick, with a 100 by 70 foot floor area.

On the Move . . .

By Dorothy E. Boyle

IT WILL be Merry Christmas at a new address for many people this year. Among them—

Mr. and Mrs. Frederick N. Leonard who have leased the apartment of Gen. and Mrs. Sherman Miles at 1763 N st for the winter months, through the office of Laura Harlan Co. The Leonards have a lovely place at the Eastern Shore, but it's a little breezy for the winter months.

BOYLE

Mrs. Mary Louise Harris and her pretty teen-age daughter, Patricia, have taken over the Lawrence Barnes' house at 125 West Leland st. in Chevy Chase. Mrs. Harris has recently leased royalties on a handy little gadget which will revolutionize the hanging of pictures and mirrors. The home was leased through the office of Nelle Lowe Cassell.

Also in Chevy Chase are "newcomers" Mr. and Mrs. John J. Mitchell from Newton, Mass., via New York City and their two youngsters, John, jr., and Kathleen. The Mitchells have purchased 5421 31st st. nw. from Mr. and Mrs. Harry Roth through the office of Howard R. Schafer. The Roths have a brand-new house at 2713 Rittenhouse st. n.w., purchased through Lamon & Henderson.

The first row of little stockings in many years will be hanging at the biggest fireplace at 1404 35th st. n.w. this year. The house has just been sublet by Mr. and Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard to Dr. and Mrs. John P. Gallagher and their four youngsters, through the office of Mrs. Emery Smith. The Stoddards have bought a house on O st.

After hanging innumerable holly wreaths in leased houses through the years, Mrs. Harold Walker has at last purchased a fine new residence on R st., the main section of the famed Friendship, former home of the late Mrs. Evalyn Walsh McLean. The diSibour Co. is making many chaanges in the property, all to the good, and by spring there will be quite a colony of new faces sharing property lines.

Home from Japan and happy to be "transplanted" in time for Christmas festivities are Maj. Gen. and Mrs. A. C. McAuliffe and their two children, Patricia and John, who have leased 3600 Porter st. nw. from Capt. and Mrs. David M. Tyree. The Tyrees, with their young son, David, are getting settled in their new home at 117 Prince st., Alexandria, purchased through the office of Lyle Kennedy.

An appropriate spot for a Christmas scene is 3507 N st. nw., that little converted stable which was recently sold by the office of J. Leo Kolb Co. to Mrs. Mildred V. Tanner for Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Stol.

Also happily released from the ordeal of house-hunting in time for Christmas shopping are Commander Ernest Dunlop, USN, Mrs. Dunlop and their two children, Gary and Gail, who have taken a house at 649 Monticello dr., Falls Church, Va.

Here and There in D. C. Real Estate Offices

WORK output in local realty and building offices will be down considerably this week—due to Christmas parties. Nearly every large office traditionally has its own office party for employes, while several organizations and associations have annual Christmas gatherings for friends and guests.

Over 400 persons gathered Friday at the Statler to enjoy the fun at the Home Builder Association's party. Santa Claus, portrayed ably by Edward R. Carr, came on stage drawn, not by Donner, Bleixen, Prancer and Dancer, but by four beautiful girls. Entertainment included Evalyn Tyner and her trio. Over 500 pounds of candy was distributed to the various Boys Clubs around town.

Members and guests of the Washington Real Estate Board have been asked to bring a toy for a girl or boy when they attend the board's annual Christmas party, slated for Thursday noon at the Mayflower Hotel Ball Room. Edward R. Carr is in charge of the entertainment, according to Oliver M. Walker, board president.

The Washington Chapter of the Producers' Council, Inc., celebrated the holidays with a gay cocktail party Wednesday at the Carlton Room of the Carlton Hotel.

Three homes exhibited in the recent 'Homes of '49" sponsored by The Washington Post are included in the current issue of American Builder, trade journal. They were built by M. T. Broyhill, Malice & Brooks and W. C. and A. N. Miller Development Co.

The Washington Building Congress will hold its annual Christmas cocktail party from 5 to 7 p. m. Tuesday at the Sapphire Room of the Mayflower Hotel. Durwood Boeglen is chairman of the party committee. Assisting him are John T. Beamer, Don F. Brown, A. Julian Brylawski, jr., John P. Bubb, Lee Flatley, E. T. Greenstreet, Paul Holmes, Robert W. Holland, Floyd Jennings, Ralph Lovell, Alan Mills, jr., William Richardson and Robert Williams.

SANTA CLAUS never had it so good! Reindeer Donner, Blitzen and Dancer have graciously sidestepped in favor of Betty Cannon, Janet Cassell, Evelyn Lear and Lorraine DeBoe. The occasion was the first annual Christmas party, Friday, at the Statler by the Home Builders Association. Santa Claus was portrayed by Edward R. Carr, local builder

What It Takes to Move a House

Compton, Calif. (AP). — You, too, can be an $18 a day house mover at age 70 like Abb Wilson if:

You don't smoke, drink, carouse and stay out late nights. Eat plenty of fruits and vegetables and drink a glass of orange juice before going to bed.

That's Wilson's advice, and he has been manhandling houses for 40 years. The rugged septuagenarian admits to only two weaknesses —plug chewing tobacco and baseball. The only thing that will keep him awake after 10 p. m. is a baseball broadcast.

Here's a Colonial Setting for Antiques

Gray-green, old ivory, white and scarlet serve as a beautiful background for treasured antique mahogany furniture in the dining room of famed Carter's Grove. In this lovely Virginia mansion, built 2½ centuries ago, the gray-green enamel is used for the paneled fireplace wall as well as the woodwork in the balance of the room where the walls are painted chalk white. Glass curtains, lamp shades and hooked rugs introduce the old ivory tone, while pewter objects are given added beauty with glints of scarlet in the accessories.

Progress and History Give Town a Bellyache

MARIETTA, Ohio, Dec. 17 (AP).—"The trouble with Marietta," said Steve Hoag, "is that it is just like the kid who ate too much candy."

"It's got a stomach ache."

Stephen Durward Hoag, who has been operating Marietta's Lafayette Hotel for 31 years, watched the bustling main street of this once sleepy college town. He paused to reflect on the days before 60 million dollars in new chemical industry struck like an avalanche.

"Marietta," he continued, "is just trying to digest too much new industry all at once. It's not the only town around here with the same trouble, either.

"This is only one of a lot of small towns along the Ohio River Valley—and, for that matter, along Lake Erie—that's getting in on this chemical boom."

History and progress have collided head on in this city of under 20,000, where citizens for generations have pointed with reverence to the remnants of an old blockhouse built in Indian fighting days.

This collision—the industrial birth of an area primarily farm country for generations—is paining a number of Hoag's fellow townsmen, too.

J. M. McFarland, owner of Marietta's Wakefield Hotel, is a case in point. When he saw a sign at the city outskirts lauding "Ohio's fastest-growing industrial city," he was moved to comment:

"Marietta should be remembered as Ohio's oldest and most beautiful city, not for smokestacks and industry."

Marietta—founded in 1788—had 14,500 citizens in 1940. Now estimates run close to 20,000. A suburban roster of 2000 soon is to be added.

Check Fuel Costs

Old heating units often are the cause of excessive fuel costs. Keep a check on the cost of fuel this winter. If your outlay is excessive for the size of your home, plan on replacing old heating units. Often the cost of new units can be offset by the savings in fuel.

Little Rent 'Gouging' Seen in U. S. Areas

DO LANDLORDS raise the rents sky high when rent controls are lifted?

Apparently not, reports from decontrolle dareas reveal.

As of December 2, a little more than two and one half million units had been freed from controls, with about 12 million still controlled. Texas and Nebraska have decontrolled. Wisconsin has substituted State controls for Federal.

Alabama is scheduled to be decontrolled next May. Housing Expediter Tighe Woods has decontrolled, in piecemeal fashion, Arizona and Utah.

Office of the Housing Expediter has decontrolled 425 areas; 184 have been freed from controls by action of local governing bodies; six areas by State option and five by recommendations of local rent control boards.

Three Recontrolled

OHE has found it necessary to reinstitute controls in only three cases: Americus, Ga.; Somerset County, Pa., and Harrodsburg, Ky. In these cases, OHE was shown enough evidence of rent gouging by landlords that controls were renewed.

By and large, however, reports from decontrolled cities reveal that landlords have gone easy on rent increases, with no mass evictions and other dire consequences predicted in some quarters if rent controls were lifted.

A poll by the Dallas Times-Herald, taken three months after decontrol to allow tempers to cool, showed an average increase of 11.6 percent. Of the tenants contacted, 40.5 per cent reported rents had increased.

The Dallas Times-Herald wired The Washington Post this further information concerning its poll: "Survey revealed general rent increases were moderate. However, some heavy rental boosts uncovered. In few isolated cases rents were upped 7 percent, doubled and in one instance were tripled. Poll was taken from eight separate sections of the city with fair division of income. Few tenants moved as the result of increases. In most instances tenants said hike was justified."

Quiet on Rental Front

A TELEPHONE call to Sam B. Boyd, editor of the Washington (Ind.) Democrat, brought a reply of "no complaints—very few rent increases." The city, of under 10,000 population, was decontrolled over three months ago.

A call to J. E. Devalon, managing editor, Mount Vernon (Ohio) News, also produced a similar "no complaints by tenants, no abuses by landlords."

A survey of member boards by the National Association of Real Estate Boards found rent increases have been moderate, more units made available and "confidence in the rental market is being restored."

"In some cases rent reductions have resulted, and in many others where rent increases were made, owners have made improvements in their properties which they could not afford to make with the lower rentals," according to a statement by the association.

General comments from leading realtors in decontrolled cities, as reported by the association, included these:

Robert S. Carnes, president of the Tampa (Fla.) Board of Realtors, said: ". . . there has been no general rent increase . . . in some higher-priced apartments there have actually been some reductions."

Mayor Hugh Wasson of Chattanooga, Tenn.: ". . . once again free contractual relationship, the American way of doing business, has been restored to Chattanooga."

'No Mass Evictions'

RUSSELL R. ROGERS of the Spokane Board of Relators: ". . . paint, wallpaper and building equipment suppliers have experienced increased business as a result of the willingness of some landlords to again start maintaining their property."

Colbert Coldwell, El Paso, Tex., realtor: "Rent control went out here on October 19 and all the prophesies as to excessive raises in rents by greedy property owners together with evictions, riots . . . and civil commotion, resulting from lifting of controls, just did not materialize."

O. J. Dowling, Carlsbad, N. M., realtor: ". . . the largest rental agency here has advised that they have not raised the rents on any properties they are looking after, since controls were lifted. The civilian housing unit at our abandoned air base, renting to veterans only, has more vacancies than ever before. The 'for rent' column in the daily newspaper has been over one-half page in length."

Federal rent controls will expire after June 30, 1950, unless extended by Congress. Robert Cogswell, District Rent Control Administrator, has gone on record favoring extension.

Legion Backs Home Project

Blackwell, Okla. — Construction has started on a 61-single-family unit veterans' cooperative housing project here, the first in the State under American Legion sponsorship. It is being built under provisions of the National Housing Act permitting FHA to finance houses to be built by a nonprofit corporation and sold to members of the corporation.

An FHA-insured blanket mortgage of $396,500 has been obtained for construction of the local project. Title to individual houses will be passed to veterans buying them and will be released from the blanket mortgage. The houses will sell for around $7000, including the lot. Buyers will have their choice of frame or asbestos siding and shingle or composition roof.

The American Legion is planning sponsorship of similar projects for veterans in other Oklahoma cities.

Drop Reported In Contracts

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Civil engineering construction awards dropped to $119,434,000 for the week ended December 15, Engineering News-Record reported today. This was 60 percent below $302,115,000 in the preceding period and down 18 percent from $146,187,000 in the similar week a year ago.

Private awards for the week amounted to $75,379,000, off 4 percent from $78,490,000 in the previous week, but 71 percent ahead of the $44,038,000 reported a year ago. Largest contract was for a 20-million-dollar garden apartment project at Whitestone, N. Y.

New Dams Promise Plenty of Water

The United States Bureau of Reclamation is now building 23 dams, 10 power plants, more than 200 miles of canals and 2315 miles of transmission lines. When present work is completed, the bureau will have 119 dams with a storage capacity of 82,780,000 acre feet. An acre foot is enough water to cover an acre (slightly over 200 by 200 feet) 1 foot deep.

Architects Told to Plan For Television

New York, Dec. 17 (AP).—Television should be given the same careful consideration in architects' building plans as plumbing, heating and other facilities, an industry leader claims.

J. R. Poppele, president of the Television Broadcasters Association and vice president of Station WOR in New York, declared television planning was highly important in construction of multiple dwellings.

"Architects conferring with clients in the future would be wise to suggest not only conduits for television wiring, but also outlets for a plug-in on the master antenna system," Poppele said at a luncheon of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects.

"Installation of television facilities after construction has been completed often results in a more expensive and less satisfactory television system, with exposed wiring and equipment placed in undesirable locations. Installation of an antenna system during construction is less costly to the building owner in the long run."

Housewife Invents Unique Place Card Holder

Denver (AP). — Mrs. Helen M. Traylor, a Denver housewife, has designed place card holders to match the decorative patterns of nationally-advertised table silver in about 50 different motifs.

The card holders are handcut in steel, then engraved in silver. Removable cards with the guests' names may be slipped in and out easily.

Decorating Old Floors Is a Specialty

Old wood floors in old houses call for special study. A room can be enlivened—yet the old-time effect can be maintained—by enameling them a dark or medium tone. In entrance halls, a border of contrasting color is sometimes effective. Floor enamel, especially manufactured for the purpose, is available in various colors.

Special Features

- OVER 2,500-CAR PARKING AREA
  The intermittent planting of trees and shrubbery creates a visual cover for the otherwise objectionable parking area with its large expanse of paving material. The parking area is more than sufficient to take care of the peak hour of the peak day of the year. Less than 25% of the area will be devoted to building use, so that there will be available a minimum of three square feet of parking for each square foot of ground floor building area, or sufficient space per car for every 15 square feet of building area.

COVERED PATHS
The covered walks connecting all buildings create a weatherproof business center, with the well planned, beautiful structures designed for maximum consumer attraction and maximum selling.

POOL
The reflecting pool will be a feature of the Central Arcade Plaza.

MEETING ROOM
These rooms will serve the convenience of the residents for social and civic advancement.

AIR-CONDITIONING
The owners will install in each tenant building a separate and complete airconditioning plant, to be operated and supervised by the tenant.

GAS STATION
Car conditioning will be handled while shoppers are making the rounds.

AMUSEMENTS
At the development there will be a theater, bowling alley, skating rink, swimming pool, radio studio, etc.

BUS TERMINAL
The buses on University Lane and Riggs Road will stop on the property to load and unload passengers.

GARAGE
There will be a sub-surface garage in the project, taking care of approximately 100 trucks for the convenience of the merchants' requirements.

- PUBLICITY
  Spot radio announcements are planned. Weekly bulletins are planned for mailing to residents to keep them continuously mindful of the opportunities at the "Golden Triangle."

Carol Channing, A Star Born in Great Tradition

By Richard L. Coe

THE BIG GIRLS IN THE BIG TOWN: As that "South Pacific" song says, "There Is Nothing Like a Dame" and the pinnacle a dame can reach in New York is dizzying, enviable and altogether wonderful. Being a big, if water-tight town, Gotham always thrills to its ladies, young and old.

Newest to reach the top is Carol Channing, who is giving so winning and wonderful a performance as Lorelei Lee in the Ziegfeld's "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes." Being a big, husky lass, Carol isn't the tiny, innocent charmer you may recall from the Anita Loos novel, but so skilled a comic is she with her own atrocious method of depicting guile that she makes the part merrily her own.

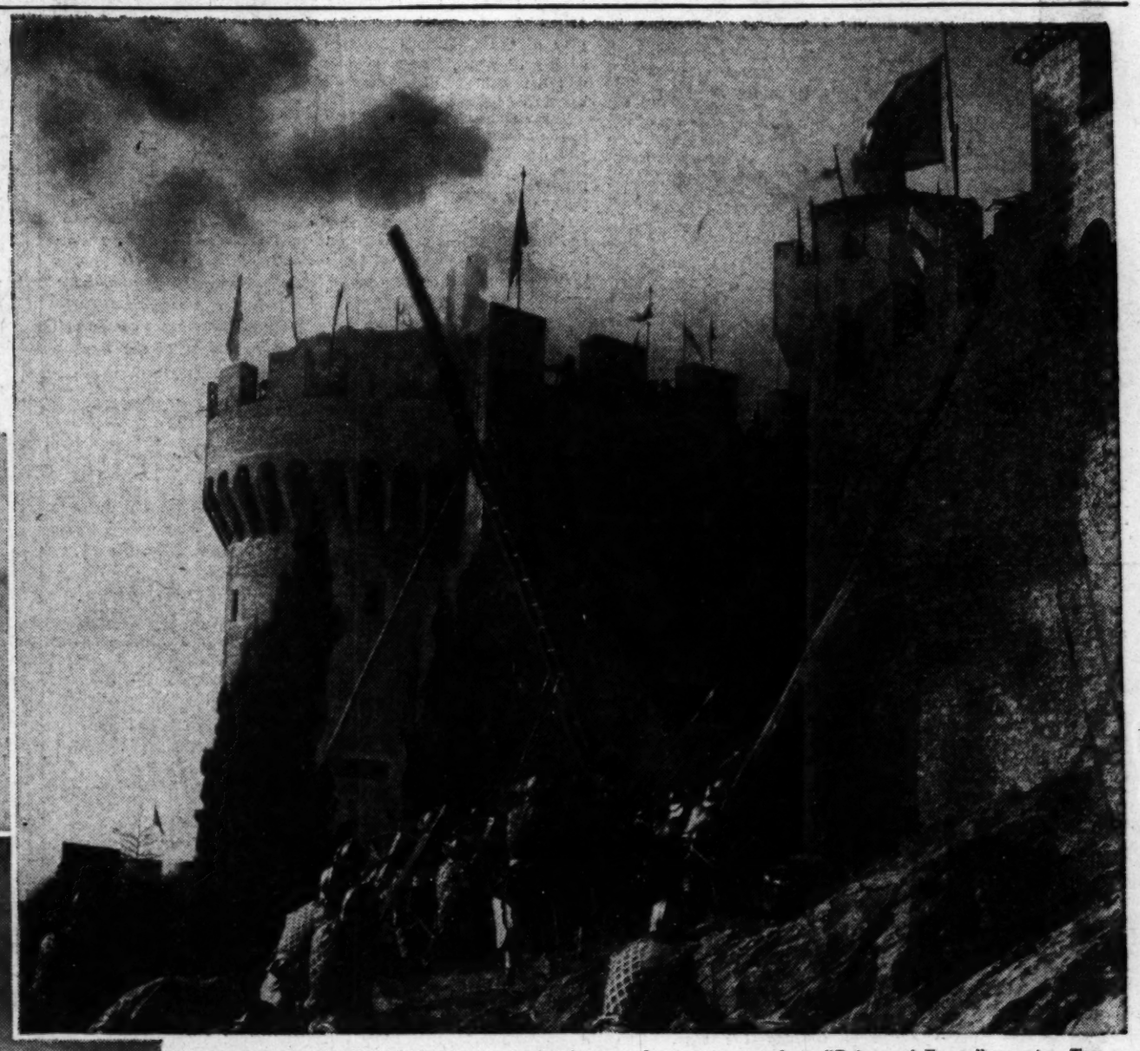
Carol came up the hard way, doing everything and anything as an entertainer, stock, the saloons, understudying. In "Let's Face It," she understudied Eve Arden, who was kind enough, when it appeared her health was indestructible, to let Carol go on for one performance. "I didn't blow the lid off," admits Carol.

San Francisco-born, she decided at 10 to run for class office, not as president, but as secretary, "because I noticed that the secretary did most of the talking and bossing around." She picked Vermont's Bennington as her college because "there you spend three months of the college year working in your chosen field." This took her to New York for a part in "No for an Answer," which didn't last long, but was enough to keep Carol from ever going back to Bennington.

Naturally, after years of obscurity which ended with her hit in last year's "Lend an Ear," she's delighted to be the toast of the town. "I sometimes feel Lorelei was written just for me. I'm sorry I missed living in the Twenties, enjoying my own gold-digging and bath-tub gin."

Watching her sing in that pebbly voice, rolling those innocent eyes for "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend" and hearing her stop the show, you know that a star's been born in the classic tradition.

FROM the seriousness of her award-winning "Johnny Belinda," Jane Wyman revels in a frothy bath and comedy for "The Lady Takes a Sailor," opening Saturday at the Warner. Right, Rosalind Russell accents elegance and comedy in "Tell It To the Judge," opening Tuesday at the National.



THE DAYS OF THE BORGIAS and a battle around an Italian walled city come to the Palace screen next month in "Prince of Foxes," starring Tyrone Power and Orson Welles.

CAROL CHANNING
. . . "Diamonds Are a Girl's Best Friend."

ESTELLE WINWOOD ankles down 45th st. at 8:35 just before the curtain goes up at the Royale, which boasts her name in "The Madwoman of Chaillot."

Estelle's probably the only girl in town who can afford so leisurely a curtain-time luxury; she doesn't come on till the second act, at which point she steals the proceedings from No. 1 Madwoman, Martita Hunt.

"Yes," sighs Estelle in that wan but sharp voice of hers, "it's wonderful not having to work all evening, but you know, darling, I've been doing this for a full year now and I'm getting taaahd. We close January 7 and then for the road again."

SYLVIA SIEGLER'S name you won't know, but she's the founder of that Show of the Month Club and pulled a fast one anent "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes" that has the ticket brokers sighing, for seats are at a premium.

Sylvia heard the show's first audition and, staking her capital on the deal, bought about 10 performances for her club members. Which means that Show of the Month Clubbers will be seeing the season's biggest hit right off the bat, thus influencing potential joiners.

GRACE GEORGE, 70 this Christmas Day, looking radiant at Grand Central Station, Boston-bound with "The Velvet Glove" company and costar Walter Hampden, holds court with friends and admirers . . . In the cast is her granddaughter working under the direction of Guthrie McClintic.

CHERYL CRAWFORD, beneficiary of an exceptional tribute . . . Eleven gentlemen paid for a Times ad to urge the public to see her "Regina," musical version of "The Little Foxes" . . . These knights of chivalry were: Leonard Bernstein, Jerome Chodorov, Moss Hart, George Jessell, Michael Kidd, Clifford Odets, Cole Porter, Harold Rome, Mike Todd, Tennessee Williams and Dwight Deere Wiman . . . To no avail: "Regina" closed last night after 50 performances, as did Miss Crawford's other entry of the season, "The Closing Door," after less than three weeks.

KATHARINE CORNELL hostess in her dressing room to fabulous Mrs. L. C. Naff, proprietor of Nashville's (Tenn.) incredible Ryman Auditorium, a church-like edifice with pews for seats, home of Grand Ole Opry Saturday nights and High Culture others . . . Miss Kitty, in a leopard-skin dressing gown, rejoices over her past triumphs in Nashville, promises to go back again . . . Her play, "That Lady" is at the Martin Beck and backstage has the oldtime elegance—red carpeting leading from the star dressing rooms to entrances of the set, a costume-protector and one of the theater's traditions for top stars.

CELESTE HOLM, whose Ado Annie in "Oklahoma!" pushed her into a vehicle of her own, "Bloomer Girl," and since has vitalized several Hollywood films, is back in the big town . . . And for something a far shout from Annie, Kate Hardcastle, the lady of Goldsmith's rollicking "She Stoops to Conquer" . . . With her will be Brian Aherne, Ezra Stone, Burl Ives, Evelyn Varden and Carmen Mathews for a two-week run starting the 28th in the New York City Center's series of four revivals at popular prices . . . Maurice Evans is the superman of this municipal enterprise . . . Two other bills will be Eva Le Gallienne and Richard Waring in "The Corn Is Green," and Evans, Dennis King and Walter Abel undar Margaret Webster's direction for "The Devil's Disciple."

'Streetcar' Closes

Three Hits Of Broadway Will Tour

By Mark Barron

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (AP). — Christmas week normally is a time of quiet where Broadway first nights are concerned, but behind the scenes it's a busy period for shows preparing to go on tour.

Tonight the long run "A Street Car Named Desire" ended its profitable engagement after 855 performances, and the comedy, "Yes M'Lord," folded after 87 performances with the delightful British actor, A. E. Matthews, in the leading role.

The Fay Kanin comedy, "Goodbye, My Fancy," finished its hit run of 446 performances on Broadway a week ago and will reopen December 26 in Chicago for a coast tour with Ann Harding in the leading role.

This run of "Goodbye, My Fancy" was extraordinary in that three Hollywood stars have played the leading role. Madeleine Carroll and Ruth Hussey played the role first, and now it is in the able hands of Ann Harding.

Miss Harding first came to the attention of Broadway critics 21 years ago in the leading role of "The Trial of Mary Dugan."

Now she is a calm, captivating actress who is taking "Goodbye, My Fancy" on a tour which will extend even longer than her original "Mary Dugan" and her subsequent tours in "Strange Interlude" and "Candida."

The long run, "A Street Car Named Desire," will start touring in Philadelphia December 26, then proceed to New England and Canada. Uta Hagen, Anthony Quinn, Mary Welch and George Mathews will continue playing their Broadway roles.

When it begins its tour the night after Christmas, "A Street Car Named Desire," can boast that it equaled "White Cargo," "Angel Street," "Anna Lucasta" and "Tobacco Road' in playing that many performances on Broadway.

On January 17 "The Madwoman of Chaillot," the mad French fantasy which made Martita Hunt a star, will close after 368 performances and go on tour.

A day later Broadway will present a show with a title which, it is hoped, will be prophetic for 1950. It is a topical revue called "Alive and Kicking."

Ford's Theater Seatholders May Exchange Tickets

Washington subscribers to the Theater Guild series of plays at Ford's Theater, Baltimore, have been informed that, should they so wish, they may exchange their Saturday matinee or evening seats to "Summer and Smoke" for other performances during the week.

Director Bess Davis Schreiner states that since Christmas Eve may be a time when patrons would prefer to be at home, her office in the National Theater mezzanine will try to accommodate subscribers.

Miss Schreiner's office hours are Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday afternoons from noon till 5 o'clock.

Koussevitsky Gift Aims At New Works in Music

By Paul Hume

A MAGNIFICENT addition to the Library of Congress music division came during the past week.

Serge Koussevitsky announced through Luther H. Evans, Librarian of Congress, that he would establish in the Library the Serge Koussevitsky Music Foundation. The initial endowment is over $100,000. The chief purpose of these funds is to commission new works in many forms from American and European composers.

The Koussevitsky Foundation has been in existence since 1942 when the former conductor of the Boston Symphony created the fund in memory of his first wife, Natalie Koussevitsky. Since that time, 35 composers have been commissioned to write new works for the foundation.

Quick Renown

SOME of these compositions have already become world famous. Among them are Benjamin Britten's opera, Peter Grimes, sung in many languages throughout Europe, and with great success in this country both at Tanglewood and at the Metropolitan.

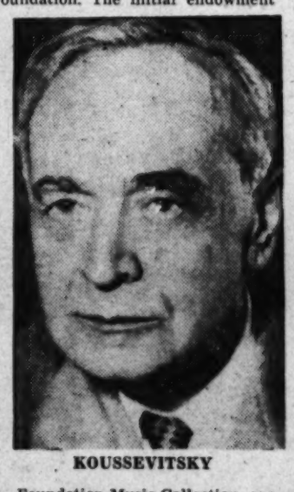
Best known orchestral work in the list of commissioned scores is Bela Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra. This score has already been taken into the permanent repertoire of many of the world's leading orchestras and has appeared on two leading phonograph recordings.

Marc Blitzstein's opera, Regina, based on The Little Foxes, is closing soon after a short Broadway run. Commissioned by the foundation in 1946, it will close after its present run of 50 performances. Nine works commissioned in the past seven years have not yet been completed.

These include four operas, two of which are to be by Samuel Barber and Virgil Thomson; two symphonies, by Roy Harris and Randall Thompson; two chamber works from Peter Mennin and Irving Fine, and an orchestral work from Arthur Honegger.

New Foundation

AN ADJUNCT of the gift of the foundation to the library is the formation of the Koussevitsky Foundation Music Collection, consisting for the most part of original manuscripts of music commissioned by Koussevitsky.



KOUSSEVITSKY

In announcing his gift to the Congressional Library, Koussevitsky said he wished his foundation's activities continued under appropriate institutional auspices. He felt the library to be particularly qualified for the purpose.

It is in direct compliment to current activities of the music division of the library to have another such foundation established under its guidance. At present the music division enjoys gifts of the Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and Gertrude Clarke Whittall Foundations.

These two donations make possible the frequent concerts, generally of chamber music, heard in the Coolidge Auditorium of the library. It is also under these foundations that Dr. Harold Spivacke, chief of the music division, assists various institu-

In the Heidt Finals

It'll Be a Riot, No Matter Who Wins

By Sonia Stein

THERE IS bound to be an uproar no matter who wins the Horace Heidt National Finals tonight.

With four finalists, there's certain to be a disgruntled group claiming one of the three other contending acts outclassed the winner.

But apart from that, there's always another collection of people who protest that the winner get the audience applause—which decides the matter—for reasons apart from talent. If 9-year-old drummer Tommy Check wins the $5000 finals, somebody will say he won because he's cute as a button and not much bigger.

If 360 pound Ralph Sigwald, baritone, wins the deal, somebody's certain to set up a howl and claim that everybody loves a fat man in spite of the rumor, and that he won by weight.

The bell-ringing brothers, Gilbert and Wayne Shepard, are only 17 and 15. Nice appealing ages, and besides, who doesn't love a family act?

Trumpeter Al Hirt, who won the fourth quarter finals last Sunday and thereby qualified for the big finals being held tonight at Uline Arena (broadcast at 9:30 p. m. over WTOP-CBS), seems to be the only straight man in the crowd.

What's the Diff?

NOW, much as I hate dogs walking on their hind legs, children standing on boxes to reach the xylopohone, one-man bands, peg-leg dancers and such outstanding contributions to the artistic world, I can't see what all the gum-beating is about when such a one wins a contest. If a performer appeals to an audience, it doesn't matter a particle what the appeal is, really.

If people want to pay hard earned money to watch a contortionist, let 'em. If I liked watching Dick Contino, who won last year's finals, because he "flourishes" his accordion when he plays it, that's strictly my democratic privilege.

RALPH SIGWALD
. . . he's got plenty

You'd have to be quite blind to the ways of the entertainment world to think pure talent counts more than smart presentation and style.

But let's, for the sake of literary accuracy, stop calling these things talent hunts. They are essentially—and quite correctly—hunts for appealing performers. Let's just not hear any more nonsense about talent, O. K., Horace?

Veep to Be Heard

THE GUEST SPEAKER on the show tonight will be Vice President Alben Barkley who will be present via transcription. On hand to read the applause meter and lend an air of official sanction will be Postmaster General Jesse Donaldson and Secretary of the Interior Oscar Chapman.

Also on hand will be a huge audience. The Heidt show seems to have a faithful following and it pretty nearly takes an auditorium the size of Uline to handle the crowd.

The price of admission ($1.25 to $3.60) is for the big variety show which precedes the broadcast. This show, which starts at 6:15 p. m., uses the talent (watch it!) that Heidt has discovered during the year which wasn't quite appealing enough to get into the finals. There are some visual acts—pretty girls and comics—as well as the radio-wise acts. Proceeds from the show go to the Jaycees Youth Welfare Fund, a project of the Junior Chamber of Commerce which sponsors the appearance here of the Heidt show. The broadcast itself is still sponsored by Philip Morris cigarettes, of course.

Closeup—Two Lowell Thomases

Tibetans Have No Use for the Wheel

By Tex McCrary and Jinx Falkenburg

BECAUSE it happened in a mountain pass 17,000 feet high in Tibet, the details of the near fatal accident that smashed Lowell Thomas' hip were not flashed to the world along with the brief bulletin on his injury. No longer news, that story is still an interesting chapter in the adventures of the world's most famous father-son team.

"We had made friends with Tsarong Shape, the Rockefeller of Tibet," said Lowell, "and he loaned us some of the best mules in the country. He sent along also two horses in the caravan, to be sold at the border.

"After two days of riding a mule, I decided to try one of the horses—only half-broken and hard to mount. We were coming down a glacier at double speed, hurrying to get home. There's an old proverb that says—'Unless a horse carries you uphill, he's not a horse; unless you walk downhill, you're not a man.'

Then It Happened

"AND so I dismounted, and at the bottom of the slope, I tried to mount again—that's when it happened . . .

"The horse bolted, with my foot in the stirrup. I had a quick choice—I could try to work my foot loose from the stirrup, and risk being dragged . . . in that country you're a goner after a hundred yards.

"Or . . . I could try to jump in the saddle. I jumped for it—so hard, so desperately, that I cleared the saddle, clear over the other side, and onto a pile of jagged rocks!

"I was half-paralyzed, without morphine—and of course, no doctor for days. From that point on, my son carried the load . . . I would not have lived . . . without him."

Young Lowell, veteran of many a skiing accident and a wartime bomber pilot, trained to look after wounded men at high altitude, rigged a litter for his father, and sent for coolies to carry him out—an a 16-day trek! Later they found Lowell's hip had been broken in eight places.

At times he had to wiggle out of the litter and hobble along a trail on the narrow edge of a canyon wall—the curves in the trail would have tipped him over into the abyss. Twelve men carried him, working in three shifts of four, and all day long, day after day, the coolies would sing the same hymn: "Oh Lord Buddha, Lighten Our Load!"

"Their prayers were answered, too," says Lowell, "because I lost 15 pounds on that trek—weight I couldn't afford to lose. But my son, with the whole job on his shoulders, lost 25."

Not until they got out of Tibet did they find out how serious the injury was—"otherwise we would be there yet, scared to move."

What, No Wheels?

ALL his life Lowell had wanted to go into Tibet, the land where the iron curtain is even tougher than the one around Russia. Even Marco Polo couldn't get into Lhasa, capital city, 12,000 feet high. Proof of their stubborn suspicion of foreigners in the fact that in the whole of Tibet there is not a single wheel—not a wheelbarrow or a cart of any kind. The wheel is a symbol of the Western world and hence forbidden.

But commerce unlocked the gates of Tibet, as it has unlocked so many walled corners of the earth; Tibet's main product is wool, and the greatest buyer is America—with India the middleman. A few years ago, five of the first Tibetans to venture out of their country came to America, to see if the "middleman" couldn't be cut out of the wool trade with Uncle Sam.

Lowell Thomas quickly stuck his foot in that tiny crack in the closed door to Tibet—with a summer off for the first time in 20 years of radio, he made plans for an expedition to Tibet. Through friends in Washington and India, he tried—and was told, "Impossible." But they did relay his request, an entry permit for a party of five; Lowell, his son, a geologist, a doctor and a cameraman.

Back from Lhasa came a message from the Dalai Lama: Lowell Thomas and his son would be welcome!

Young Lowell was in Persia, gathering material for a lecture tour, when he got this cable from his father:

"The miracle has happened. Meet me in Calcutta. Outfit an expedition to Lhasa: Pop."

And that's how it all started; we asked Lowell: Did you ever get to meet the fabulous little boy who is the Dalai Lama?

"That's another whole story—let's talk about it another day."

Mooney to Play Here Dec. 31

Art Mooney and his M-G-M recording orchestra will usher in the New Year at a special dance Saturday night, December 31, in the National Guard Armory.

MOONEY

Noted for his arrangement of "Four-Leaf Clover," a record that's sold over 750,000 copies, Mooney's banjo-band stylings have been hits on many disk releases.

Billy Dee and Kerwin Somerville will be featured with the orchestra. There'll be table service and dancing until 2:30 a. m., 1950.

Princeton's Triangle Show Goes on Here Wednesday

PRINCETON University's famed Triangle Club will present its annual musical here Wednesday night at Lisner Auditorium.

This year's fandangos are titled "Come Across," a satire on American foreign policy and tourists. A traveling Senator tries to underwrite the prune industry of the Republic of Ripoli, "land of whispering pines and itching palms." Yes, there are girls, buckets of them, in reality hairy-legged Princetonians.

President of Triangle this year is Robert G. Abernethy, of 1673 Columbia rd. He states that unlike some Princeton saturnalias, the plot is strong and is furthered by song and dance as well as dialogue.

Principal innovation will be putting the chorus line into interpretive dancing. Frank Westbrook, who's been in several such musicals on Broadway, has directed the dances, with Carl Shain as general production director.

The club's Washington visit is sponsored by the Princeton Club of Washington for the benefit of the alumni group's scholarship fund. Seats are now on sale at the United Nations Club.

Friendship Yule Show Set for This Afternoon

The annual Christmas program of Friendship House, 619 D st. se., will be held this afternoon at 4 o'clock.

"The Story of Christmas" a new pageant by Etta Gifford, will picture the growth of Christmas as the spiritual quest of man through the ages. The Friendship House choral group, directed by Nowell Ferris, will sing appropriate music, with Franklin Roberts as soloist and Mrs. Elizabeth Warriner as narrator.

Choir Sings Stravinsky Mass Today

PAUL CALLAWAY moves into the musical front twice this week.

Today at 4 he shares conducting honors with Howard Mitchell when the Washington Cathedral Choir sings with the National Symphony Orchestra. The choir will give the first local hearing of Igor Stravinsky's Mass for men's and boys' voices with woodwinds. They will also sing an Advent cantata by Bach, and lead the audience in singing carols with the orchestra.

Thursday night Callaway presides over the combined Washington and Cathedral Choral Societies as they sing together for the first time. Handel's Messiah is the annual vehicle. Barbara Stevenson, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Harold Haugh, tenor, and Arthur Kent, baritone, are an outstanding quartet of soloists. The orchestra will be drawn entirely from the National Symphony.

NEXT WEEK'S Philadelphia Orchestra concert under Alexander Hilsberg presents Eleanor Steber as soloist. Miss Steber, who apparently thinks she is becoming a dramatic soprano, lists Beethoven's Ah, Perfido, and arias from Weber's Freischutz and Nicolai's Merry Wives of Windsor.

Stabler's Ticket Mart has moved into Brentano's Book Store on F Street.

The Messiah will be sung today at 3 p. m. in the Naval Academy Chapel in Annapolis.

The week's outstanding music include, in addition to this afternoon's National Symphony, the first performances by that orchestra of Ravel's transcription of Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition, and the brilliant scenes from Alban Berg's Wozzeck. Rose Bampton is soloist in the Wozzeck, and will also sing the great scene from Fidelio, and Bach's Bist du bei mir.

Fedora Aleman, Venezuelan soprano, sings tomorrow night in the Pan American Union. This afternoon Erika Thimey brings Children's Ballet to Cafritz Auditorium.—P. H.

Tar Heel Symphony

The North Carolina Symphony, thanks to memberships, donations and the $15,000 which it gets from the State, is a $100,000-or-better orchestra with several unique features: It is called the only State-subsidized symphony in the country and, pairing a free concert for children with every regular concert, it is credited with playing more concerts in proportion to the length of its season then any other symphony in the world.—(AP).

Eddie Gallaher
ON RECORDS

A SONG growing in favor of late is "Round Her Neck She Wore a Yellow Ribbon," as recorded, among others, by the Andrews Sisters with Russ Morgan (Decca). And therein lies a tale.

During the Civil War cavalry officers wore a broad yellow band down the side of their trousers; and this led to a dress fad among the damoiselles they left behind them. When a young lady of the hoop skirts-and-bustle set was found wearing a yellow ribbon 'round her neck, it indicated that her love was a cavalry officer. A musical composiion "She Wore a Yellow Ribbon," was written in celebration of the ceremony and was eventually adopted by the cavalry as its own song.

During the first World War it became an Air Force song, in which capacity it also served in World War II. There is a good precedent, therefore, for the current popularity of the tune. It must have a strong basic appeal, as it's been sung by five generations of Americans.

TRADITIONAL music has been used before as material for popular songs. 'There's No Tomorrow" is a modern version of the old Italian melody, "O Sole Mio." "Down By the Station," a Tommy Dorsey favorite of recent vintage, was an American version of that venerable French folk tune, "Alouette." And if you listen closely to "Riders in the Sky," you will note that the melody is almost identical with another Civil War hit, "When Johnny Comes Marching Home." These songs were modernized for current consumption, however; while "She Wore a Yellow Bibbon" is now being presented in practically its original form.

This business of reviving old songs seems to represent a trend of the times. True, there are many numbers which retain their popularity through the years, like "Stardust," "Tea for Two," and "Night and Day." But there is an unusual number of songs in circulation at this moment which were composed many years ago, enjoyed a certain vogue in their day, and were then almost forgotten until their revival in 1949.

If one were to take a few of these popular songs of today and note the years in which they were originally written, it would illustrate quite vividly how little public taste has changed (or progressed, if you will) with the years. A partial list would read something like this:

1862—She Wore a Yellow Ribbon, 1915—Canadian Capers, 1917—Johnson Rag, 1922—Toot Toot Tootsie, 1923—I Never See Maggie Alone, 1924—Charley My Boy, 1924—There's Yes Yes in Your Eyes, 1927—Ain't She Sweet, 1931—Marta, 1937—I Can Dream, Can't I?

BIBBIDI-BOBBIDI-BOO—Perry Como, RCA Victor: A couple of years back, while most composers were knocking themselves out probing the recesses of their brains for lyrics with a clever meaning, a team of songwriters solved the problem quite neatly. They produced a song with lyrics which were absolutely meaningless, and it proved an instantaneous hit. Its title, you will recall, was "Chi Baba. Chi Baba, Chi Baba." Now the same writers have contrived another set of nonsense syllables, employing the modified march tempo of "Chi Baba," and the result, "Bibbidi-Bobbidi-Boo," is even more captivating than its predecessor.

It would be unfair to say that the words, "Bibbidi-Bobbidi-Boo," are meaningless, however. According to Walt Disney's forthcoming picture, "Cinderella," they are the magic words invoked by the fairy godmother in performing such feats as changing Cinderella's rags into the latest creation from Woody's.

Perry Como lends the song a certain magic of his own. His deft, light handling of the lyrics bears a fairy tale charm for young and old which serves to remind us, if the season itself were not enough of a reminder, that we're all kids at heart.

Eddie Gallaher is heard on WTOP every day except Sunday on the Sundial, 7:45 to 9:30 a. m.; Moondial, 11:15 p. m. to 12:30 a. m.

Erika Thimey . . . appears with her dance group today at 3 p. m. in Cafritz Auditorium

Finnish Girl To Benefit by Kindler Plan

Tii Niemela . . . she was selected by Hans Kindler

AT THE time of his death in August, Hans Kindler was working out details of an American-European Artist Exchange Plan.

His plan was approved by UNESCO directors in France, and an American Committee formed which included Mrs. Dean Acheson, former Ambassador and Mrs. Robert Woods Bliss, Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge, Carleton Sprague Smith, Mrs. Stanley Woodward, Mrs. Guy Patterson Gannett, Mrs. Truxton Beale, Mrs. Walter Bruce Howe, Mrs. Lytle Hull and Mrs. Tracy Dows.

During his trip to Europe last spring, Dr. and Mrs. Kindler heard a young Finnish soprano, Tii Niemela. They were so impressed with her voice and singing that they chose her to be the first artist presented in this country under the plan.

In accordance with Kindler's wishes, Mrs. Kindler is making the singer's American appearances possible.

Details for a Washington appearance have not yet been announced.

Advisory Board

DIRECTORS of the original Koussevitsky Foundation have been named to an advisory board for the library's Koussevitsky Foundation. They include Dr. and Mrs. Koussevitsky, Aaron Copland, Howard Hanson, Gregor Piatigorsky, William Schuman, Richard Burgin, and Leonard Bernstein. The chief of the music division will also serve ex officio.

This committee was a natural selection at the time the original Koussevitsky Foundation was established. They represent leaders in American musical life, but they are centered around New York and Boston. We hope that when additions and replacements are made to this committee that musicians from the Middle West and Western parts of the country will be included.

This foundation can do much to aid the cause of new music, both here and abroad. We would suggest that as one of its functions it study the excellent course pursued by the British Council. That council, like the Koussevitsky Foundation, commissions new works. As an aid to performances of such music, it not only secures live hearings but sees to it that the music is recorded by England's leading record companies.

Record Problem

ONE of the purposes of the Koussevitsky Foundation is to "encourage the dissemination of new works by performance and by other means." American record industries have signally failed in their unwillingness to issue recordings of new works by American composers. This could be remedied with proper help from the new foundation.

Koussevitsky's generosity cannot be overestimated in his establishing in our national library the means for concrete aid to composers here and abroad. The Library of Congress is the proper repository for such a trust. We shall look foward to its activity in administering these funds.

The Record Player

Kostelanetz Is 'Not Bad' On Ravel Mother Goose

RAVEL: Mother Goose Suite. Andre Kostelanetz and his orchestra. Columbia X-320. $3.

After the first shock of seeing Ravel and Kostelanetz paired in this subtle score, one can see some good points to the project.

Kostelanetz has a high sales appeal. This is some of Ravel's least sensational but most beautiful music. It is a good thing to have the Kostelantez market urged to buy some music they might otherwise run from. The performance is not bad at all.

Its chief fault is a sternly literal sense of phrasing and rhythm, with insufficient give and take in the delicacy of the writing. The sound of the orchestra is great and the music wins its way with ease.

FRANCK: Symphony in D Minor. Amsterdam Concertgebouw under Mengelberg. Capitol-Telefunken. EEL 8023. $4.85.

If you collect Mengelberg recordings, and there are great reasons for doing so, you will want to add this to your list. It is modern in tone and engineering with fine surfaces.

The performance is straightforward for the most part and never seems unduly dramatic. I prefer Monteux and Beecham in recorded accounts of this but this set would be my third choice ahead of many others.

Sibelius: Tapiola. Royal Philharmonic Orchestra under Beecham. Victor 1311. $2.

This is the piece which some writers like to describe as "that piece which on its own merit would qualify its composer for a place among the world's greatest." That is not my opinion but it is an indication of how great some think the music.

It is certainly great Sibelius and a marvelous tone poem. Koussevitsky issued a recording of it not long ago which is a masterpiece. Beecham adds nothing to that, but is no less impressive. It is hard to choose. Price is the same. Surfaces might be a bit quieter in this set than in Koussevitsky's. Here is a wonderful buy if you like the piece.

DEBUSSY: Images pour orchestre. L'Orchestre de le Suisse Romande under Ansermet. London LP 44. $5.95

These three pieces for orchestra include Gigues, Iberia, and Springtime Rounds. Iberia is the most often played of the three. That may be the reason it comes off best in this recording, or the trouble may be located in the engineering.

At any rate, Iberia, which is one of Debussy's subtlest and most difficult scores to conduct, has a stunning performance here. Ansermet, who is conducting the National Symphony in January, is one of the world's foremost geniuses in directing modern music.

He understands the tenuous threads by which the first portions of Iberia are held together. He makes the virile Spanish finale a tour de force of rhythmic control. His orchestra sounds well, if not the silken thing we hear in the NBC or Philadelphia Orchestras.

Modern competitors in this music include Fritz Reiner in a brilliant Iberia, and Monteux in the first and third of the Images. Reiner's orchestra is better but he does not make the opening sections come alive as Ansermet does. Monteux far outshines the new version in his handling of the two outer pieces, making us think the trouble is not as much with the engineering which is really very good, as in the baton.

Week's Program For Symphony

ROSE BAMPTON, soprano, sings with the National Symphony this week.

Her contributions to the program are outstanding. After Bach's tender song, Bist du bei mir, Bampton will sing the scene and aria from Beethoven's Fidelio. When Arturo Toscanini conducted Fidelio on the air several seasons ago, Bampton was his Leonora.

BAMPTON

After intermission the soprano will return to sing three excerpts from Alban Berg's opera, Wozzeck. This music, at first thought dissonant, is quite Wagnerian in texture and harmony. The vocal part is difficult but extremely lyrical.

Howard Mitchell surrounds Miss Bampton with music from Mendelssohn's Midsummernight's Dream, and closes with the stunning transcription of Moussorgsky's Pictures at an Exhibition.

Royal Philharmonic To Tour U. S., Canada

The Royal Philharmonic orchestra, the only one in England operating today without government subsidy, will tour the United States and Canada with conductor Sir Thomas Beecham a year from now, Arthur Judson of Columbia Artists Management has announced.

This month Dean Dixon is conducting the Radio Symphonique Orchestra, the Paris Conservatory Orchestra and the Orchestre Nationale in Paris; he will be the first American Negro invited to these conductorial posts.—(AP).

Schools Planning Yule Concerts

Washington's schools rival the churches in giving Christmas concerts.

Typical of the many seasonal programs is that given annually in Central High School. Their concert this year was Friday, December 16. In the school auditorium, choruses, soloists and various ensembles from both junior and senior schools appeared.

The program was under direction of Miss Jeanette Wells.

Mrs. Leland Finds That Post Want Ads Get Quick Results at Low Cost

Mrs. J. M. Leland of 1843 N. Capitol St. was looking for someone to occupy the "large room for two" she had for rent. She wisely turned to The Washington Post for help and placed a low cost Post want ad. The first day it appeared she rented the room and is "very satisfied with the people who moved in."

Mrs. Leland found that it was easy to place a Post want ad. She just called NAtional 4200 and a trained ad writer, who had helped many other Post want ad users to find the right tenants, assisted her in wording her ad for the best results.

Follow Mrs. Leland's example. Find tenants for your room, apartment or house quickly and economically with a Post want ad. If there's a phone listed in your name, you can call in your ad and charge it. Dial NA. 4200.

Next Weekend Your Radio And TV Set Will Be Yulish

This is either Santa Claus or Jerry Strong, we can't be sure which. Jerry, the WINX disk spinner, is collecting gifts at his Christmas Corner, 7th and F sts. nw., to be distributed on Christmas Eve to the children of four orphanages here

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (AP)—The story of Christmas will pour forth from 85 million radios and 3,500,000 television sets next weekend.

Radio, with its greater audience and its ability to circle the globe with transmissions and pickups, will have the more ambitious presentations. Television, with sight as well as sound, will have perhaps the more colorful offerings.

White House Tree

A HIGHLIGHT of both radio and television will be the lighting of the Christmas tree on the White House lawn Christmas Eve, and President Truman's annual Yule message to the nation. The ceremony is scheduled for 5 to 5:30 p. m., Eastern Standard Time.

The NBC and CBS television pickups will show the actual lighting of the tree in Washington. However, since the President will deliver his Christmas message from his home at Independence, Mo., beyond reach of the video network, they will be unable to show him as he speaks.

A radio highlight on Christmas Eve will be an NBC program from 1:30 to 2 p. m., that will include greetings from the Archbishop of Canterbury and Pope Pius XII.

Other Christmas Eve radio features will include these:

"Story of the Nativity" presentation by Fred Waring on NBC, 10 a.m.; Edmund Gwenn as Scrooge in Ralph Rose's adaptation of Dickens' "Christmas Carol" on CBS at 1 p.m.; first radio performance of "The Christmas Story," a new cantata by Peter Mennin, on ABC at 9 p.m. As midnight approaches, Metropolitan Opera star Lauritz Melchoir will be heard singing "Silent Night" on an ABC program that starts at 11:30 p.m.

Pope's Proclamation

ON Christmas Day, NBC will present a recording, from 2 to 3 p.m., of Pope Pius XII's proclamation of the start of the Holy Year and a description of the colorful Vatican ceremonies.

From 3 to 3:30 p.m., Mutual will present Lionel Barrymore in his sixteenth portrayal of Scrooge in Dickens' "Christmas Carol."

Besides the Christmas Eve tree lighting, NBC television will have nearly three hours of special Yule telecasts starting at 10:30 p.m., with "According to Joseph," a story of the Nativity. From 11 to 11:45 cameras will pick up Christmas observances in homes and churches at Bethlehem, Pa., and from 11:45 p.m. to 1:20 a.m., NBC will televise the colorful midnight mass from St. Patrick's Cathedral in New York City, with Francis Cardinal Spellman as the celebrant.

Various Christmas Day features will be televised by other networks and stations. ABC's key New York station, WJZ-TV, for instance, will have showings Saturday evening and again Sunday afternoon of a special television film of Dickens' "Christmas Carol."

Klavan's Now Misbehavin' At the Capitol

THE presidential daughter, Margaret, will sing on ABC's Carnegie Hall program Tuesday night (WMAL, 8 p. m.) in what will be her first New York appearance. Miss Truman made her singing debut in a Nationwide broadcast with the Detroit Symphony several years ago.

Tuesday she'll sing Puccini's "O Mio Babbino Caro" and a pair of Christmas carols—"Silent Night" and "O Little Town of Bethlehem."

Apropos of Margaret's air appearances, her agents don't seem particularly receptive to offers she's had to guest on television shows. ("We have her concert schedule arranged 'just right' and we don't want anything to interfere with it," they say.)

But it's occurred to me that Margaret would do a wonderful job with a TV show of her own. Music critics can't seem to agree about Margaret's qualifications for a singing career, but everybody seems impressed with her charm and poise, her ability to fence with the press and to lure an audience.

As the emcee of an interview program she'd be perfect. She'd have a terrific Hooper, she'd have no trouble getting guests and she has a good speaking voice. Cameras aren't kind to her, since her beauty lies in her coloring, but that's a small point.

How about that? It's a way to keep herself in singing lessons, while she studies.

GENE KLAVAN'S appearance on the stage of the Capitol Theater this week should scotch one rumor. (May lead to a couple more, though.)

WTOP's delightful post-midnight disk jockey (12:30 to 2 a. m.) is actually one man in spite of all the dialects he uses on the air. He claims he speaks no Euphratrian and very little Madagascar, but everything else seems to be on the tip of his tongue.

The idea of playing emcee at the Capitol tickles him, although he disparages the whole thing. "They don't care who they put on the stage the week before Christmas. This is the week the band gets a vacation. This is the week they take out half the seats to reupholster them. This is the week the people who do come have so many packages in their laps they can't see the show anyway."

You may spot Klaven between shows, disguised as a jet plane, streaking between WTOP and the Capitol. He'll have to "pull" his records—and Klaven uses very unusual ones, "the ones nobody else has the nerve to use," he says—in between his stage appearances. Yesterday, when he had five shows at the theater, he also had to do his new Saturday afternoon show at WTOP (4 to 4:55), as well as his night show.

WWDC's all-night man, Alan Cummings, has been citing him as unfair to night-time audiences, keeping them awake with his shows at the Capitol. To which Klaven says, "Hah. The picture is a 'sleeper' and so is the audience."

THE Department of Defense's "Time for Defense" show on WMAL-ABC, Tuesdays at 10 p. m., which runs the gamut of military situations from invasion of beachheads to kitchen police, takes up a familiar situation this week: The serviceman who doesn't get home for Christmas.

The main character in this week's story is Chief Warrant Officer Carl V. Thatcher, now a patient at Walter Reed Hospital. A veteran of service in both theaters of war, Thatcher lost an eye, a portion of one foot and suffered a paralyzed arm and a hearing loss. His tours of duty have been pretty much in hospital beds since then, and he hasn't spent Christmas at home in five years.

But the Defense Department knows what makes a radio show tick: Thatcher goes home this Christmas.

Video Won't Change Your Habits Much

By Wayne Oliver

NEW YORK, Dec. 17 (AP).—A television set, like a new baby, causes drastic changes in the family routine when it arrives. But after a year or two, when the novelty wears off, the pattern swings back towards what it was before, although things may never be quite the same.

That has been the personal experience of many set owners, and surveys have shown it's pretty much the over-all picture.

Findings in one of the latest studies, reported by the Television Broadcasters Association in its "status of the television industry," include these:

Among viewers in the New York metropolitan area who have had sets for an average of two years, seven out of 10 go to the movies less often than B.T.—before television. But that's a decline from a survey of six months ago when eight in 10 said they went to the movies less. In other words, some of the television stay-at-homes are getting back into the movie habit.

Nearly eight in 10 said they read the newspaper as much as before, compared with about seven in 10 six months earlier. And more then one third reported increased interest in newspaper sports pages since owning a television set, although three in 10 indicated less interest in the theater pages.

However, four in five reported they listened less to radio in the evening than before owning a video set, and nearly two out of five said they listened less to daytime radio.

As to newspapers, the trade publication Editor and Publisher has made a survey showing more newspapers being sold now than a year ago in 33 of 42 cities having television stations. Of the remainder, Managine Editor Jerry Walker writes that circulation losses either were too slight to be traced, or could be attributed in large part to other factors, such as price increases.

Evelyn Knight, now working with Dick Haymes on Club 15, five times a week at 7:30 p. m. on WTOP, gets a little something done about the Yule.

TV Man Says Murder's Fine If Neatly Done

The DuMont Television network's manager of program planning, Larry Menkin, says "There's nothing wrong with murder melodramas except doing them badly—I've always thought highly of Hamlet and Macbeth."

Menkin's comment is in reply to a protest against video crime shows filed with the Federal Communications Commission by a California civic group.

His contention is that crime shows, when properly done, provide a form of release for inner tensions or "Compulsion to violence" which he says are present in all persons, no matter how well adjusted. His own shows include "Hands of Murder," with the theme that murder is a disease "that can be treated, prevented and cured."

NBC Starting Early

Although summer is more than a full winter away, NBC's program board already has started preliminary work on arrangements for next vacation's fill-ins. Normally, this task is left until April, but by going at it now, the program experts figure they can get things in better general shape when sponsor absentees begin.—(AP).

That $100 Draws 'Em

WHAT price self-determination? It could be an even $100.

WWDC is currently conducting an experiment in programming which may prove whether thousands of Washingtonians will change their radio listening habits to get in on what is probably a 500,000-to-1 chance of making $100.

Several weeks ago when WWDC discovered that Disk Jockey Jon Massey was drawing a terrific audience with his night show (11 p. m. to 1 a. m.) on which he offers a $100 prize in a new kind of numbers game, they added the same gimmick to his morning show (6 a. m. to 7 a. m.) and are now awaiting the next audience survey to see the results.

Massey reads the five-digit manufacturer's identifying number on a record chosen at random, and gives $100 to anybody whose Social Security number or driver's license number finishes with the same five figures.

At night Massey's audience pull has been surprisingly high. On a 250-watt station, in competition with 5000 and 50,000-watt stations—he ranked first or second—depending on which survey you believe—during the period he was on the air. The morning show which was without the $100 gimmick at the time the last surveys were made, was then rating about fourth in town.

The Pulse Survey, one of the two that showed up the interesting facts in Massey's rating, also showed that WTOP had a fantastic lead in "share of audience" during the sample weeks in September and October. (Pulse queries people one week out of each month). WTOP beat the next leading station by almost 7 percent.

Simplified Stamp Catalog Progresses in Britain

By William M. Stuart

THE "simplified stamp catalogue" has made remarkable progress in Great Britain. Under the sponsorship of Stanley Gibbons this catalogue is popular in certain philatelic circles. The term "simplified catalogue" means that certain material within the regular catalogue has been omitted entirely or reduced to simpler terms.

STUART

It is just here that the "simplified catalogue" runs up against collectors. No general rule has been adopted for the elimination of material to be used in this catalogue. Its cost has been reduced at the expense of valuable data omitted by stamp editors because of rarity or scarcity. The catalogue is a source of information and the collector may object to the editor taking the liberty of curtailing a source of information under guise of simplicity. Collectors will not be restricted to certain listings and prices because catalogue publishers issue smaller books. Unless the "simplified catalogue" contained certain information it would be of little value.

THE Postoffice Department has prepared for the heaviest holiday season in its history. From September 1 through November the Bureau of Engraving and Printing supplied postmasters throughout the country with 2,245,185,000 2-cent stamps and 2,993,040,000 3-cent stamps, a total of 5,238,225,000 for these two denominations alone. For the Christmas season in 1948 there were 1,626,591,000 1½-cent stamps and 2,412,190,000 3-cent stamps supplied postmasters throughout the country. The rate for Christmas cards this season is 2 cents.

Color of the 3-cent commemorative to the American Bankers Association will be green. The initial printing calls for 115,000,000. The first day is January 3 at Saratoga Springs, N. Y.

The 25-cent air mail commemorative for the Universal Postal Union was designed by William K. Schrage. The engravers: vignette Matthew D. Fenton; ribbon, lettering and numerals John S. Edmondson.

The youthful ruler of Iran, Mohammed Reza Shah Pahlevi, who is on a good-will tour of the United States has been honored by his country with a series of eight bi-colored stamps. Each of the new stamps bears a vignette portrait of the ruler together with views of various public and government buildings.

A special cancelation die in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the establishment of the Vancouver, Wash., postoffice to be used in letters emanating from this office from January 8 through July 8, 1950, has been authorized by the Postoffice Department. The slogan will read as follows: "Vancouver Postoffice 100 years, 1850-Jan. 8th-1950."

AT THE meeting of the Collectors Club, Branch 5, S. P. A., on Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple, Mrs. Elizabeth Medbery, president of the Silver Spring Philatelic Society, was the guest. Manager Anderson called for more auction material, especially for the donation and $2 auctions in January. At the meeting on Tuesday evening in Pythian Temple the usual auction will be held.

The Postoffice Department has announced that a 3-cent stamp honoring the 100th anniversary of the birth of Samuel Gompers, labor leader, will be released here on January 27.

The annual dinner of the Silver Spring Philatelic Society will be held in the Peacock Room of the Silver Spring Hot Shoppe on December 22 at 8 p. m. Mrs. Burt, Sligo 3284, has charge of the reservations.

The Woodridge Stamp Club will meet tomorrow evening at 9 at the Woodridge Public Library, 2206 Rhode Island ave. ne. There will be an exhibit of Christmas seals and the story of the seals related by the members.

THE 3-cent bankers' stamp for release January 3 at Saratoga Springs, N. Y., has as its central design a coin on which is shown some fields in which the banks give service. The home, the farm, transportation and the skyline all symbolize this idea. The stamp is arranged horizontally. The color will be announced later.

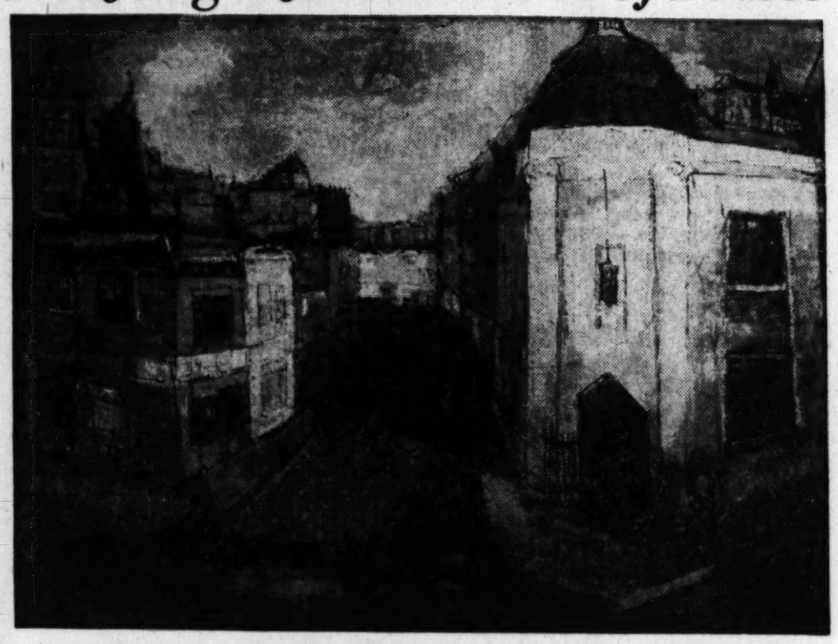
Two commemorative stamps have been removed from Philatelic Agency Sales List No. 266, November 21, Moini Michael and Gettysburg, both 3-cent denominations. Business at the agency is quite brisk. Many orders are being filled for the Christmas season.

The "Tasco Surcharge and Cancellation Detector has just been perfected by the Tatham Stamp & Coin Co., Springfield, Mass. "Hard-to-see" cancelations are easily deciphered with this scientific discovery. This philatelic accessory will be a most welcome visitor to every stamp collector for now the difficult postmark easily comes to life.

There were 375,000 cancelations of the 10-cent air mail stamp at New Orleans, La., on November 18, and 375,000 stamps sold totaling $37,500.

Society of Washington Artists Show

The Judges Just Ran Out of Prizes



John C. Lewis' "Towers of Georgetown," best of show in the Society of Washington Artists exhibit at the National Museum

By Jane Watson Crane

THE OFFICERS and executive committee of the Society of Washington Artists made the selections for the group's 58 annual show, now on view in the Smithsonian's national Collection of Fine Arts. They are "tough," picking 71 out of the 350 paintings submitted, and fewer than a dozen sculptures. Two neighbors from Baltimore, Adelyn Breeskin, director of the Baltimore Museum of Art, and Reuben Kramer, sculptor, judged the awards. Their regret was that they did not have more prizes to distribute.

The committee's selectivity has made for a good-looking professional exhibit and allows for breathing space in installation. Care and thought were given to the hanging. The show reflects good taste primarily; it might have been picked for a collector who wanted works to decorate a home which was neither wholly in antique nor modern style.

The society has a complicated system of prize giving, which seems old-fashioned and somewhat hard to implement. Entries are limited to oils and sculpture. Eligible are members of the society and other artists living within 25 miles of the District. No work previously exhibited in Washington may be submitted. Painting to compete for the society's medals is classified according to figure or portrait, landscape, still life or composition. For these and a sculpture medal, no previous winner is eligible unless his earlier award is more than five years old. Cash prizes, starting with $100 for best painting in the show, include the Barney Memorial $100 award for figure or portrait, the F. R. Jelleff $50 award in sculpture and the E. Thomas Saltz $50 award in painting.

Best in Show

BEST in show prize went to John C. Lewis, a young painter who has made a spectacular rise in a short time. Lewis' work is sensitive and restrained. The few colors he uses are combined with skill and he handles paint with knowledge and feeling. The portrait prize went to Richard Lahey, director of the Corcoran Art School, a veteran contributor to local exhibitions. One of the few paintings in the show with real movement is Omar Carrington's "North Wind," which won the Saltz prize. The medal in sculpture went to Russell Houston for a handsomely carved torso and the Jelleff prize to Jane Love for "Bison" in stone. Painting medals were awarded to Richard Miller, Elizabeth Benson and Don Lynn; honorable mentions to Leonard Maurer and Lois Jones.

We can appreciate the judges' dilemma, for in a show where the level is so high it is almost impossible to discriminate. Circling the group, our admiration went to Helen Rennie's "Budapest String Quartet No. 3," Mary Ruth Snow's "Desolation," Edmund Demers' "Madonna of Humility," Virginia Parker's "Spring Flowers," Elizabeth Jenson's "Harbor," John Galloway's "Figures Approaching a Viaduct," Robert Willis' "Carnival at Night," and Samuel Bookatz's "The City" among the paintings; Sarah Silberman's figure in tulip wood and Donald Kline's "Montezuma" among the sculptures.

The Demers entry interested us particularly because it is one of the few religious paintings we have seen in which the artist has taken a conventional theme and expressed it in a contemporary idiom without losing the essence of the original conception.

ONE impression we gained from the group of paintings was the tasteful and often ingenious use of color. These canvases would give satisfaction and pleasure on the walls of a home. Likewise the sculptures, which are on a scale to suit the dimensions of an average Washington apartment.

Carlson Wins Medal Of Landscape Club

In the thirty-fourth annual exhibition of the Landscape Club of Washington, Charles X. Carlson was awarded the silver medal for "best painting in the show." Other awards went to Omar Carrington for "River Sunrise," an oil; Charles Shinn for "Hurricane," a water color, and Jacob Kainen for "Turrets." The jury was composed of Jessalee Sickman and Robert Woodbury.

Lisner Exhibits Drawings by Mackall

WORKING drawings and color studies in scale for stained glass windows are included in the exhibition of work by R. McGill Mackall of Baltimore in the Lisner Library of George Washington University. Studies for murals and the preliminary sketches for portraits are included, as well as the finished oils. Mackall, who is head of the Department of Fine Arts at Maryland Institute, is a practicing professional artist and the exhibit at the university is designed to give insight into his working methods as well as his accomplishments. About a dozen easel paintings are shown, including landscapes, still lifes and portraits.

A retrospective exhibition of the work of the late L. Moholy Nagy has opened at the Institute of Contemporary Arts, 1322 New York ave. nw., and will continue to January 15. Moholy Nagy was associated with Germany's now defunct but still famous Bauhaus at Dessau. Before the war he came to the United States and eventually established a school in Chicago, under the patronage of Walter Peepke and other sponsors. The current show, which is in the nature of a memorial, is circulated by the American Federation of Arts.

Ruth Starr Rose, painter and printmaker, has a delightful show of prints in black and white and color at the United Nations Club. Featured are interpretations of Negro spirituals and a few works based on Mexican themes. Mrs. Rose grew up on Maryland's Eastern Shore and many of her prints were inspired by the songs of the colored people as "they worked in the fields, sang in their churches, or threw their crab lines from skiffs on the Chesapeake." One of the prints exhibited, "Pharaoh's Army Got Drowned," is the same subject and design as a mural she painted on request for the Ebenezer Chapel of the African Methodist Church at Copperville, Md. The artist, whose work has been widely exhibited, is now a resident of Alexandria, Va.

The Washington Hebrew Congregation is holding an exhibition of painting and sculpture by members who pursue the arts as a hobby. More than 50 entries were secured by the executive director, Sidney Kellner. They are installed in the temple on 8th st. between H and I nw. While the group is chiefly amateur, some of the contributing artists have had their work included in local exhibitions.

Edmund Demers' "Madonna of Humility," also in the Society of Washington Artists show

The aim is to make the show an annual event.

Charles Burchfield heads the all-artist jury of selection of paintings for the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts 145th Annual, to be held in Philadelphia January 22 to February 26. Other members are George Harding, Vaughn Flannery, John Heliker, and Ben Shahn. Oronzio Maldarelli, who judged the current Corcoran show, heads the sculpture jury, with William Zoraeh and Waldemar Raemisch assisting. Approximately $6000 will be spent for purchase from the exhibit.

The staff-selected Whitney Museum Annual of American Art opened in New York this week. Out of 161 paintings exhibited, 40 are by artists not previously represented. The show will continue through February 5.

You Can Rent a Painting

SAN FRANCISCO (AP)—For only a few dollars you can hang an original oil painting or watercolor on that blank wall of yours—if you belong to the San Francisco Museum of Art.

The museum's 3500 members (it cost $10 to belong), may rent paintings for 1 per cent of the purchase price per month. That means that two or three dollars a month rents some fairly high priced merchandise.

The idea simply is to take art out of museums and put it on people's walls. It enables art lovers to enjoy the use of a top-ranking painting in their own homes, and gives lesser known artists a chance to have their works seen.

Doctors are good customers, the museum people say. They rent several paintings each month, changing pictures in the waiting room to keep the patients interested.

Mrs. Francis V. Keesling Jr., who is handling the rental gallery, says many people who want to buy a painting use the renting service as a means of "trying it on for size."

The museum doesn't rent out its valuable Picassos or Rembrandts, but offers about 250 works by some of the nation's top ranking artists. Last month about 80 Western artists sent in three paintings each for rental.

The rental service is not limited to paintings, although they are the most popular. Large and small pieces of sculpture also can be rented. But if you rent a sculptured bear weighing a ton you have to transport it yourself.

At the Bridge Table

Three D. C. Players Make Life Master in Nationals

By Marian H. Barre

MRS. EDWARD COTTER, Mrs. Marianne Boschan and Miller Roberts reached the ultimate goal for tournament players by becoming life masters during the recent national contract championships in Philadelphia. Out of the hundreds enrolled in the Washington Bridge League, only six other members share this distinction.

Roberts was the first to go over the top. He needed only 3½ points to complete his qualifications and 3 of these he won on the opening night; now he has an average of some 15 "red points." Paired with a Pittsburgher, he was among the leaders in world masters duos.

Mrs. Cotter attained her L.M. degree as a member of the champion women's team of Cotter, Boschan, McNutt and Eberson. The most spectacular record was made by Mrs. Boschan, who won her full quota of national points during this tournament, in addition to the team cup she also captured the Olive Peterson Trophy with Miss McNutt, besides placing in minor events.

It was Miss McNutt, however, who was the outstanding local player though she still lacks a few points to become a "Lifer." Playing throughout the entire week, and with a flock of partners, she showed in nearly every game. When she got back, with honors thick upon her, there stood still another trophy. She had won it during the summer nationals, the defenders having failed to surrender custody for six months afterward.

Another localite made the headlines when she entered the amateur finals in top position. She was Mrs. Frieda Kenyon, who has been playing duplicate a short time. Her partner was Mrs. Lawrence Hougen, a New Jerseyite, and a sister of Miss Sue Gantt of this city. The pair dropped in the finals, but finished seventh.

Best local position in the open championship went to Dr. W. S. Benedict and John Moore, who were in the money despite a fourth spot for W. A. Poissant and Mrs. Eberson after the semi-finals. L. R. Tubbs-J. J. Parish, Skinner - Stone, Boyd - Murray, Hunter-Katz, Robins-Robins, were among the finalists. Many other local duos too numerous to mention won side events or session tops. Capitalites made a wonderful showing in the twenty-third annual national championships.

THE Federal Bridge League's December master point open pair game has been postponed until January 2 and no match will be held on December 26. At a meeting last Monday Ralph A. Grant was elected president to fill the unexpired term of Col. R. H. Skinner, and Miss Anna Charest was chosen secretary, replacing Miss Laura Hunter, who also resigned.

An announcement was made at the Chess Club that master point will be in competition on the usual "fourth Thursday," which falls on December 22.

Representing Children's Hospital, Miss Torkington and Miss O'Sullivan were present at the Washington Bridge League last Wednesday when the Women's Auxiliary staged its annual toy collection for the little patients. The match in progress was the monthly Winner's Game, double awards going to the following members:

Comdr. O. O. Liebschner-Jessie Duke, Mrs. Dixie Wright-John Luttrell, Mrs. Dora Schwartz-Mrs. Rose Robins, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Barnard (the latter pairs tied), Mrs. Bernard Rosson-Dr. E. M. Short.

National awards at the Count Club on Tuesday went to Mrs. Florence Millspaugh-M. Sobernheim, Miss Ella Welker-Miss Clara Sternecker; with half-points to Col. and Mrs. J. G. Seabourne, Mrs. M. R. Reddy-Mrs. Martin Boyle.

THE LOCAL duplicate schedule has been out of kilter since the beginning of the national championships and now the coming holidays only add to the confusion. It might be well to call the director before planning to play in any special game; changes sometimes must be made without much advance notice. Two master point games, however, are sure to be held this week. They are the monthly match for national awards allotted to La Salle Studios at 8 p. m. tomorrow and the Washington Bridge League game Wednesday evening at Hotel Roosevelt; the first section starts at 7:30, last sections at 8 p. m.

Winners at the Women's Auxiliary open pair game which was put forward to December 10 were Mr. and Mrs. Bernard Rosson, Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Lyon finishing second.

Two recent Arlington contests increased the master point holding in the Stavers family, Fred, sr., and jr., winning north-south at the F. Arthur Walker Club, Mrs. Staver sharing top awards with Comdr. O. O. Liebschner at Arlington Village, in the same game that her son finished second with W. M. Lingley, and her husband in the same position with D. J. Harris. Col. and Mrs. J. G. Seabourne were top north-south at the latter match, remaining points going to Miss Virginia Kennard-Robert Wilson, C. E. Richter-Ray Fetzner, J. F. Series-Lieut. Col. H. A. Walker.

THE FIRST tournament of 1950 is the Northern Virginia annual to be held under the auspices of the Washington Bridge League on January 6, 7, 8, at the Roosevelt Hotel This event has previously been played in Alexandria. Current titleholders are Miller Roberts, Washington; George Dickerman, Arlington, open pairs; Mrs. Myrtle McMahon-Mrs. Margaret Myrtle, both of this city, women's pairs; the Baltimore foursome of Hamilton, Hunter, Shapiro and Schlesinger; Shapiro and Miss Mary Hellen, also of the Monument City, mixed pairs.

Just in time for Christmas giving, "Culbertson on Canasta," published by the John C. Winston Co. "Every latest wrinkle and every trick of the game as played and tested by experts is in this book."

The international bridge authority who is reputed to have made a million dollars out of a deck of cards, refutes the claim that canasta will supplant bridge. "But there is a real need for a good 'second' game for the sake of variety," he says in the introduction to his new volume, "Canasta is a bizarre, exciting, charmingly exasperating game, I like it."

Conference Finds German Education At Critical Point

By Fred M. Hechinger

REPORTS from Germany lately have been more concerned with remilitarization than with reeducation. But at the National Conference on the Occupied Countries here last week representatives of voluntary agencies from all over the country insisted that mental and moral reconstruction must be pushed with renewed energy, especially since German economic recovery now is an undisputed fact.

Sponsored by the Commission on the Occupied Areas of the American Council on Education and assisted by the Department of State, the meeting reflected widespread concern over evidence that nationalism is far from dead in Germany. As if to highlight these apprehensions, the press reported, on the very day of the conference, that Bonn's Chancellor Adenauer had voiced a new demand for a German army, against the advice of the Western High Commissioners.

A Little Too Late

ALTHOUGH other important speakers and officials participated, the most significant words seemed to come from Dr. Alonzo G. Grace, until recently director of the office of public affairs under the United States High Commissioner.

Dr. Grace, who is known to have resigned in disillusioned protest over the omission of education from the Occupation Statute and the drastic curtailment of educational powers by the Allies, said: "Had such a conference been held four years ago, I feel quite certain that a much more secure program would now prevail in Germany."

In saying this, Dr. Grace appealed to the public and the voluntary agencies to take an active hand in the reeducation drive. As it becomes more and more difficult for the government to organize and finance adequate programs of exchange and cultural cooperation, the people must move into the forefront of the battle. But there was a widespread feeling—and Dr. Grace as well as other conference members, including Harold E. Snyder, director of the commission, supported this in private conference with this correspondent—that the public must also act as an alert pressure group to force policy-makers into giving education their desperately needed support.

THIS has not happened to date. "At the present time there are 35 persons on the staff of formal education, which includes everything from nursery to university, as against approximately 150 in the field of economics," Dr. Grace revealed. Production in Germany is now at 92 percent of the 1936 index, and it should be remembered that 1936 saw the unprecedented boom of German rearmament. The danger that mental, moral and political reorientation of Germany—originally presumably "postponed" pending economic recovery—will be forgotten as one of the war's primary objectives has never been more real than today.

"The one great fear in Germany is that those elements which embrace the democratic ideal will be left without support," Dr. Grace warned. "This I do know: there are islands of democratic ferment in Germany, but there are also the elements that can lead to a new militant nationalism . . . Certainly the an-eye-for-an-eye approach is wrong; but the let-bygones-be-bygones policy is equally wrong."

Calling on the people to demand a German reeducation policy over a period of 20 years, if necessary, Grace insisted: "The doors of educational opportunity must be opened to children of the German working class as well as to the 'elite.' . . . Our State Department, in my judgment, will have to undertake many ventures which are not in the present pattern."

The Hayes Version

SOME observers were inclined to regard this as an understatement when they heard Ralph Nicholson quoting General Hayes, top-ranking American military figure in the European command, in justification of the Nazis' return. These Nazis were described by the general as little civil servants who were selling stamps and teaching children. They were just pushing around papers and people; they were followers, not leaders, and they have gone through the prescribed stages of de-nazification.

These people, the reported Hayes version continued, have been in the civil service for a long time, many even in the days of the Weimar Republic. It was, so we learn, a problem of economy: either to spend time and money on training new civil servants or to let the "de-nazified" ones come back.

And so—they are now again pushing around papers and people.

Although Nicholson did not condone or condemn this view, it is to be hoped that the new High Commission policy will try a more constructive approach. It is difficult to imagine a more cynically uninformed attitude than one that puts teaching and stamp-selling into the same category and equates the pushing of papers with the pushing of people.

Positive Promises

FORTUNATELY Nicholson had more positive promises: If it has taken years to get the educational program into the proper perspective, he said, we must now try to make up for lost time. On the public information level, too, he pledged support to the non-Nazi and democratic press and promised that the High Commission will deal with problems of a resurgent nationalist press as such problems arise.

Along with most other speakers, Nicholson called on the voluntary agencies to support a stepped-up exchange program. "Democracy cannot be simply explained," he said. "It must be seen, lived with and worked with."

It was feared that the German press as a medium of democratic education would be eliminated unless support—moral and financial aid can be offered to the democratic forces.

The urgency of missionary work by the voluntary agencies was recognized; but there was, too, firm demand that such aid must be intelligently planned and coordinated in order to serve as real support for the democratic elements rather than a charitable hand-out to those most likely to reestablish or defend the old authoritarian order.

Readin', Ritin' And All That

By Paul Steiner

"HOW TO WIN Friends and Influence Cannibals" was the name of a lecture course at Fordham University. It dealt with the problems of missionaries and advocated such techniques as substituting the playing of soccer for the ancient native sports like head-hunting.

A COURSE in "How to Buy Antiques for Your Home" at New York City College teaches the proper way to purchase old furniture, rugs, silver, porcelain and old bric-a-brac.

DESIGNED to help women understand major athletic contests, a new subject has been added to the adult-education program of the White Plains, N. Y., public schools. Now, wives will no longer have an excuse for pestering their husbands with silly questions during a thrilling moment of the game.

Exclusively for women, the course deals with football, boxing, tennis and other games often understood only by the men in the family.

IN BRITISH COLUMBIA, the public-school curriculum boasts a course in "How to Hold Your Liquor."

A NEW APPROACH to philately was lately indorsed by the New York Board of Superintendents when they approved a special course entitled "The Social and Psychological Value of Stamp Collecting."

The city's Board of Education has also added, to the evening curriculum for adults, a new subject known as "The Art of Beer Brewing."

SOPHOMORES at the University of Illinois are literally fishing for college credits. Rowing and paddling about Lake Michigan, reeling their lines in and out, they are piling up points toward sheepskins by virtue of a class on "Fishing and Boating."

THREE high schools in Rochester are teaching courses in "Baby Sitting." They were instituted to combat the "real problem" caused by the scarcity of baby sitters.

AT ALBION, N. Y., there is a school conducted by Charles W. Howard in which portly men are trained to play Santa Claus in retail stores. There are nearly 200 graduates of the school, earning from $50 to $150 a week. A good Santa will handle four children per minute.

THE NYU summer schedule at Chatauqua this year included a special course entitled "Fund Raising."

To North Carolina for Christmas

By Walter W. Hubbard

American Automobile Association

IF YOU drive into Winston-Salem, N. C., during the Christmas holidays, you can forget about its being a great educational and tobacco center and live in another world—a world of old, central Europe. The Moravians in that North Carolina city are lineal descendants of an ancient province of Czechoslovakia which was once a thoroughfare for the movements of people between Vienna and southeastern Germany.

Many of their kindly manners, customs and traditions—even in the clothing they wear—have been handed down to the present generation. Of the more than 30,000 communicant members of the Moravian Church in the United States, most of them are located at or near Bethlehem, Pa., and Winston-Salem, N. C. About 700 miles will be required for the round trip outlined on the A.A.A. map presented today; slightly more if we make a few side trips.

Allow three full days for the trip; preferably six days or a week with your overnight stops planned for Roanoke, Va.; Winston-Salem, N. C.; Durham, N. C., or Richmond, Va.

Start Over 211

STARTING over U. S. 211, we motor 45 miles southwest through Falls Church and into Warrenton, Va., where you will begin to see the Christmas decorations in the windows of fine homes atop rolling hills on the large estates which feature that horse raising and steeplechasing section of the Old Dominion State. Sixty-one more miles, cutting across the Shenandoah National Park, brings us to New Market.

Eighteen miles to the south lies Harrisonburg where, on East Market st., we find Stonleigh, the Civil War headquarters of Gen. Philip Sheridan who devastated the Shenandoah Valley so thoroughly that he was hated by the South almost as much as Gen. William "March-to-Atlanta" Sherman.

Next stop, 25 miles farther along on U. S. 11, is Staunton, but you'll be called a "damyankee" if you pronounce it "Stawn-tonn." It is a city of beautiful residences, noted schools and poorly marked streets.

Thirty-six more miles south and we are in Lexington. This small city is called the "Shrine of the South" because its two greatest heroes, Robert E. Lee and "Stonewall" Jackson, lived here and are buried here. Cadets from V. M. I. never pass the Lee Memorial Chapel where the great Confederate commander is entombed without coming to a salute. This is an oft-photographed ritual which goes on all day long.

Leaving Lexington, we drive to Natural Bridge, but 14 miles away, an interesting geological formation once owned by Thomas Jefferson.

Roanoke, a city of 80,000 population, can be reached from Natural Bridge, Va., over U. S. 11, by driving 39 miles southwest.

Winston-Salem

FIFTY-FIVE more miles of traveling, south over U. S. 220, brings us to Martinsville, last important stop in Virginia before driving the next 27 miles to Madison, N. C., where we switch to U. S. 311 for the 32-mile run to Winston-Salem.

About 72 million pounds of bright leaf tobacco are auctioned here annually, but at Christmas time, the 10,000 sweet-scented, hand-made candles provide a far more impressive figure. They are cast in ancient moulds, of hot beeswax. During the process the wax is scented, the strings strung through the center of the moulds, and the pouring—usually by the middle aged or elderly women of the Moravian community—begins.

The communicants, who base their religious beliefs on an almost literal following of the Sermon on the Mount, use these scented candles in the annual Moravian Love Feast and Candle Service held on Christmas Eve, and during the Watch Night service conducted on New Year's Eve.

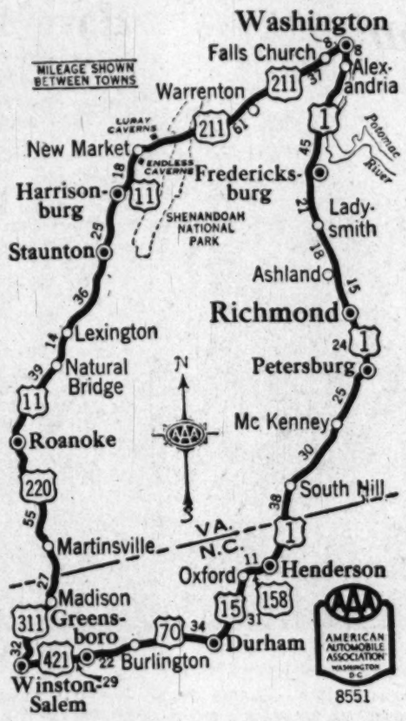
Motorists will see in their well-ordered homes huge Moravian Stars of Christmas. These are handmade stars of 32 points, made in various sizes and nearly always illuminated by electricity. A hundred and fifty years ago they were lighted by their Christmas candles. If you are fortunate, you may see some of them carried or displayed by the womenfolk. Married women wear blue ribbons to hold on their oldtime caps; widows wear white ribbons.

Off to Greensboro

LEAVING Winston-Salem's Christmas festivities, the music for which is provided by a 400-piece church band, we head east for Greensboro. This city was named for Gen. Nathaniel Greene, hero of the Battle of Guilford Courthouse in the Revolutionary War. Another 22 miles brings us to Burlington and we continue from here, over U. S. 70, to Durham, an educational, tobacco and hosiery manufacturing center. The 210-foot tower of the Duke University Chapel has a belfry which houses 50 bells comprising the carillon, the largest of which weighs almost 6 tons. The chapel will be appropriately decorated for Christmas.

Next stop, to the north, is Oxford, N. C., where we turn right over U. S. 158 and drive into Henderson, a textile, tobacco and jute center. Here the motorist switches to U. S. 1, crosses the border back into Virginia and follows this highway through South Hill, McKenney, Petersburg and into Richmond.

Fifteen more miles and we are in Ashland; then 18 more to Ladysmith; 21 to Fredericksburg where George Washington, as a boy, spent his Christmases. Fifty-three miles north, through historic Alexandria, lies the District of Columbia.



New P-TA Headquarters to Cost $750,000

Architect's impression of new P-TA building in Chicago

CHICAGO. — The new headquarters of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, to be erected at a cost of $750,000 on Chicago's near north side, will be innovationally modern and especially tailored to meet the needs of the organization, according to plans announced by Mrs. John E. Hayes, president.

Designed by Harry Weese, Chicago architect, the building will consist of two wings, one of three stories for the administration officers and another of two for production departments. Granite, limestone, and glazed brick, with stainless steel trim, will be used for the exterior.

"Approach to the main entrance," Mrs. Hayes said, "will be across a landscaped terrace shielded from street traffic, with the entrance through a high-ceilinged foyer. The design provides for a maximum of sunlight and high-level general illumination throughout large offices, with built-in lighting in the smaller ones.

Big Year Starting

School's Free, Compulsory in Israel

By Constantine Poulos

JERUSALEM (ONA).—Starting this year, education is free and compulsory for every child in Israel, Arab and Jew, from the age of 6 to 11. Opening day enrollment went above 100,000, of which 87,000 were Jews and 17,000 Arabs.

There are three outstanding features in Israel's education program.

1. Compulsory education is an entirely new principle in this part of the world. Even under the British mandatory government of Palestine, education was not compulsory.

2. In providing free education for Israel's children, the government is introducing a radical innovation in the Middle East.

3. Most revolutionary of all is the provision for compulsory free education of Arab children, male and female, which in many cases is co-educational.

It is in the implementation of this program that the government faces several problems, not the least of which is the means to carry it out. The limitation of funds, school buildings, teachers and books necessitated the drawing up of a timetable spread out over the next three years.

Budget Problem

DURING the current school year, 1949-1950, education will be free and compulsory for children between the ages of 6 and 11; in 1950-1951, from 5 to 12; in 1951-1952, from 5 to 13. Education for children aged 12 and 13 will be free but not compulsory this year. The eventual goal is compulsory education stating at the age of 4 and continuing to 16 or 18.

In terms of money alone, the bold effort to institute free and compulsory education, will impose an important problem for the government's tightly limited budget. The cost of educating 104,000 children through six classes this year will be approximately 15 million dollars, which does not include medical services or free lunches.

The budget covers only an average of 45 percent of the teachers' salaries. The remainder has to be provided by the municipalities, which also have to provide school buildings. Loans and grants to the municipalities from the government, ranging from between 25 and 80 percent of the local education budgets, will be used to build new schools.

The new school year began without new school buildings being ready, and it was necessary to extend the existing customs of teaching in two shifts, one in the morning and one in the afternoon.

Teacher Shortage

THERE IS a shortage of school teachers as well as school buildings. Department of education officials estimate that at least 1200 new teachers will be required for the full execution of the government's program. This year emergency measures have been taken and nonprofessional and untrained, but qualified, persons have been pressed into service.

An important segment of Israel's education program concerns Arab children. With an ultimate aim of equalizing Arab and Jewish education both in scope and in quality, the ministry of education has opened 10 new Arab schools this month to handle nearly 6000 more children than last year. In addition, the ministry must look forward to the possibility that the Arab population of Israel may increase rapidly as a result of the return of refugees.

New Regime Puts Stress on Budgetizing

GETTYSBURG, Pa. — Based on on the conviction that most Americans of today "do not know where we are going or why," Gettysburg College has successfully been experimenting with a new type of course to put generalization back into the liberal arts course, which has been tending to become specialized.

This new study is designed to delve into the evolution of contemporary human ideas through the study of documents which aided mankind in developing these lines of thought. It is a basic course which links together a variety of fields including everything from religion and politics to philosophy and double-entry bookeeping. Its main advantage is to give the student a good basis from which to move into the study of courses which before were relatively disconnected subjects.

Contemporary Civilization, as the course is called, also aids the freshman in making the transition from high school to college. He becomes accustomed to digesting large amounts of information, and to dealing with the significance of events rather than their physical characteristics.

Operational machinery of the course is also different from that of the average college course. Instead of being spoon-fed with loads of lecture material, students are limited to small-class enrollment, no more than 25 per section, and much class time is devoted to discussion of the topics of study.

Students are not the only persons to profit from this type of course. Because of the variety of subjects dealt with in the year-long study, instructors are drawn from nearly every department at Gettysburg. These men meet once weekly to take up any specific problems that may have come up in classroom discussions and to mull over particular phases of the course that might interest them.

After a stormy beginning with "C.C." as a required freshman course in 1947-48, the instructors have come to a clearer idea of the course's objectives and proper emphases. In a poll taken last June of all Gettysburg courses, the "CC" course was very highly rated by a majority of students who declared that they would elect to study it "if it were in no sense required."

Try Anything Motto Cracks Big Time for Record Firm

By Bill Becker

HOLLYWOOD (AP). — Every once in a while one of the smaller, less ballyhooed record companies pops up with a smash artist, a smash hit or both—and overnight that company is no longer bush league.

That's what happened in the case of Capitol, the war baby that grew up to become one of record row's big four. (Others: Victor, Columbia and Decca.)

It may happen again. The outfit everyone is watching now is Tempo, a live-wire Hollywood firm that is producing a little of everything, from Tahitian love calls to the singing of Brother Bones.

"We'll try anything," says Tempo President Irving Fogel, former Armed Forces Radio head. And it's paying off. Thanks largely to Brother Bones' clacking 750,000 sale of "Sweet Georgia Brown," Tempo showed one of the year's best advances.

Choosing the slogan, "Expect the Unusual From Tempo," Fogel made the happy choice of veteran fiddler Joe Venuti as musical director.

Now the fine, hot touch of Venuti has resulted in one of the finest jazz ensemble albums in memory.

Surrounding himself with Bobby Maxwell's swing harp, Jimmy Briggs' inspired flute and a solid rhythm section, Venuti produces music that may prove the freshest thing in its field since Benny Goodman's early small combos.

The album, providing variety to display each artist at his best, includes "It Ain't Necessarily So" and "Melancholy Baby" at slow tempo; "Karavan" and "Zone 28" at medium-to-fast pace, and Alexander's Ragtime Band" and Saint-Saens' "Danse Macabre" on the upbeat.

Home Cooking Really Available In Belem, Brazil

A genuine taste of back-home cooking is being given American travelers in far-off Belem, Brazil.

Bread, cakes and pastries from a Miami bakery are now being served at the Hotel Grande, one of Pan American World Airways' chain of guest houses in Latin America.

It seems that the Hotel Grande baker had not been altogether pleased with the results he was getting with Brazilian flour. Since United States flour cannot be shipped into Brazil, PAA solved the dilemma by flying in the finished product.

Butlin's Village In the Bahamas Opens January 27

Butlin's Bahama Vacation Village, opening January 27, 1950, will offer a new type of holiday to vacationers the year around, according to William P. Wolfe, representative for the resort in the United States and Canada.

The vacation village is located on the west end of Grand Bahama Island, 59 miles east of Palm Beach. It covers an area 3 miles long and 1 mile wide.

One of the largest resorts in the Western Hemisphere, Butlin's Vacation Village will accommodate 2000 people, offering them maximum facilities for rest and recreation. Special areas will be reserved for those who wish quiet, others for those who expect an active holiday. Families with children will be housed in still other sections where there are complete facilities for young fry.

At all seasons of the year there will be half rates for children under 12.

Whistle Stopping

What a Welcome This Welcome Was

By Orval Hopkins

ONE of my bosses, which, as I've said, run into several figures, had a hand in the dedication of a trick playground out in Maryland the other day, so as a man of many heirs, as well as being an inquisitive type who likes to check up on the work of the bosses, no matter how numerous, I suggested that we rush out en famille and officially survey the playground.

This involved a whirling melee of putting on hats, coats, mittens and boots and I should have known better. As we boiled out the front door and bore down on the family car, it started to rain. There was only one thing to do—keep going.

Traveling over Virginia, District of Columbia and Maryland roads, we discussed the weather thoroughly and decided that if the rain kept up we would visit some friends and former neighbors of ours now living in a lovely grove of trees. As it turned out, we visited both the playground and our friends.

The playground, at the Parkside School in Silver Spring, was completely deserted, because of the rain, when we arrived, and was thus in a position to receive the full treatment as administered by my wrecking crew. It's a fine playground. The kids slid down the fireman's pole (except Brien Bohn, 3), hollered stuff from the bridge of the ship, made like an airplane in the airplane, disappeared into the hole in the ground, ran yelling through the tunnels. Polly made a short but impassioned speech in the amphitheater, and Sam fell down a number of times.

So Forward

WE moved on, not without ado, and endeavored, armed with some instructions my wife had procured by telephone, to find our friends' house. The instructions were perfect, except that at the last turn, where my wife should have said left, she said right. We proceeded to what seemed to be the house, parked the car, and advanced. Polly and Sam went first and began to ring the doorbell like mad. Mary Jane followed at sort of a trot, imploring them to stop. I brought up the rear, wearing my white golf cap, in which I appear only to intimates, with my glasses at half staff, and bearing under one arm Brien Bohn, who had been scared by a couple of dogs and was screaming bloody murder. We were a handsome looking force.

It was the wrong house, of course. A strange woman came and opened the front door but not the storm door. She looked at us quietly, each in turn, ultimately arriving at where I stood in my cap, an anticipatory grin adding a fillip to my already galvanizing appearance. She shook her head, slightly, but definitely. I opened my mouth to shout the name of my friends. She shook her head again. I closed my mouth and ordered a retreat.

Shaken and damp in spirit, we finally arrived at our friends' house. They were delighted to see us. They gave us food and drink. Their dog licked us. We loved them.

NATIONAL Airlines, Inc., inaugurated a new flight from here to Havana the other day, but it turned out to be another party I intended to attend. I was able to go through channels—and don't think they aren't labyrinthine—however, and persuade the picture department to send a photographer when the flight was begun last Wednesday. He shot the two girls you see above and reported that it was a very nice inauguration. National tempted him with a drink, which he firmly turned down.

LADY NAMED Agnes Grant says the Palm Beach winter season is under way several weeks earlier than usual this year, "a significant sign of the times," she adds ominously. She at no time embellishes this uneasy admission, but does say that a cocktail and tea dance are daily late-afternoon affairs in the Tropical Gardens at the Palm Beach Biltmore. I'm in favor of these dances, but it seems to me we should have some at other hours—10:15 a. m., say.

TRAVEL AGENTS, American Society of, has appointed W. F. McGrath, of Transcontinental & Western Air, Inc., to the post of executive vice president. He will heft the gavel for the first time January 1. McGrath has served with Thos. Cook & Son and Anchor Lines, as well as TWA.

SAYS HERE some travel editors (some what?) have toured Florida at the instance of the State Hotel Association and found that people on a limited budget can go south as well as—well, people. If you want to try it, write to R. O. "Bill" Riddle, 610 Graham Bldg., Jacksonville, Fla.

Waitin' Department

Visitors to St. Petersburg who wish to mail packages during the busy winter season, take numbered cards and wait on green benches until their number is called to have their packages weighed and stamped.

Airline Sees That Patrons Have Wheels

"SANS WHEELS," teen-age terminology implying lack of car, jitney, or jeep accommodations, often has been a disconcerting position to many air travelers. speeded by air to a certain city, the traveler finds himself literally "grounded" when it comes to freedom of getting about without a car.

One airline—Braniff International Airways—has solved this problem for its passengers by providing rental cars for pleasure or business in its United States cities. By special contract with the Hertz Drive-Ur-Self System and other rental agencies, cars can be available when the passenger arrives.

When the traveler makes his plane reservation and orders a car at his destination city, the airline wires ahead and the car is ready when the plane arrives. Taxi or limousine fare from the airport to the Hertz office is credited on the rental fee. No deposits will be required of those having Braniff courtesy cards or script cards under the Universal Air Travel plan.

Hertz offices or affiliated local concerns are available at Amarillo, Brownsville, Corpus Christi, Galveston, Houston, Laredo, San Antonio and Wichita Falls, on the Braniff routes in Texas. The car service is also available at Chicago and Moline, Ill.

Average Pinellas Pay $40 for 40 Hours

St. Petersburg, Fla.—The new Federal 75-cent-an-hour minimum wage law will have little effect on St. Petersburg and Pinellas County workers, according to data compiled by the bureau of old age and survivors' insurance.

The bureau reports that the average wage in Pinellas County is slightly under $40 per week of 40 hours.

Airlines Cooperate on Japan Route

Trans-Pacific airline service between the United States and Japan and Australia is augmented by a new interline agreement of United Air Lines and Canadian Pacific Air Lines.

The agreement links 80 cities on United's 10,700-mile system with Canadian Pacific flights between Vancouver-Tokyo and Honolulu-Sydney. Elapsed time from San Francisco to Sydney, flying by DC-6 Mainliner to Honolulu and connecting there with CPA is 57 hours. This includes an overnight stay in the Hawaiian capital and an 11-hour halt in the Fiji Islands. Elapsed time from Vancouver to Tokyo is 28½ hours.

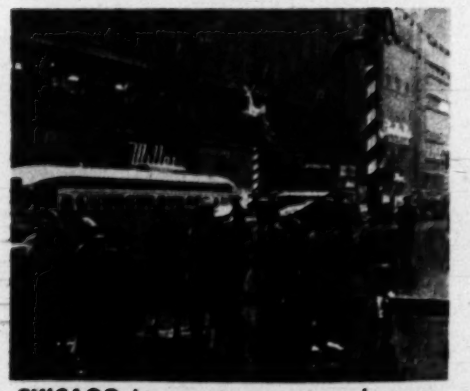
DENVER: At the mile-high Civic Center are scenes of Nativity, reindeer team.

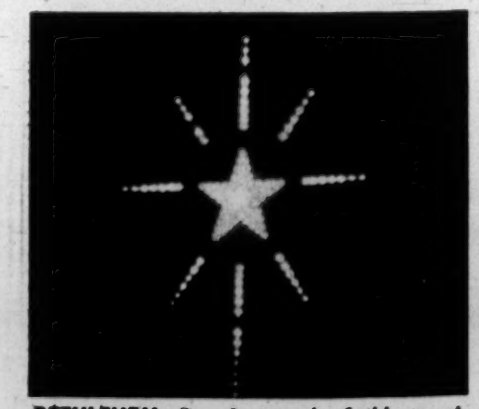
SALT LAKE CITY: Star atop Tribune-Telegram tree will shine out on Xmas Eve at moment when city's Xmas basket quota is filled.

NEW YORK: For 17th season, Rockefeller Center has giant tree with plastic lights. A 140-voice chorus sings carols.

McCOOK, NEB.: A glowing parade of "scotchlighted" figures greets motorists.



CHICAGO: Lampposts support candy canes, reindeer teams "galloping" down State St.



BETHLEHEM, Pa., is proud of this great mountain-top star. It can be seen 25 miles.

Beacons for Santa

From coast to coast lighted signs, trees, stars await him

ALL ACROSS AMERICA this week, Main Street is dolled up for Christmas. The new American tradition—making business streets as gay as Christmas trees—has taken the country by storm.

But each town has its own ideas. On a Chicago rooftop for days lay an amazing jungle of giant "candy canes." As Christmas drew near these went up on streets with Chicago's famous Christmas reindeers.

Bethlehem, Pa., likes its great electric star. McCook, Neb., tried a new idea: motorists coming into town pass a welcoming parade of Christmas figures—Santas, fireplaces, reindeers, singers (see photos). At night these big signs glow brightly in auto headlights.

The lights in Denver's Civic Center are so spectacular, special police are needed to guide traffic. Boston and Indianapolis have their trees and Nativity figures. Houston, St. Louis, New York, Detroit, and many other cities have great trees. San Francisco's Market Street is lavishly lighted. In Washington, attention centers on the White House outdoor tree.

Even in Florida

Even Jacksonville, Fla., goes in heavily for trees and decorations. But farther south in Miami Christmas trees are scarce: in Miami's warm climate needles fall too fast.

All told U. S. towns have spent several hundred thousand dollars getting Main Street ready for Santa!

JOHN McCLOY: built his career on an explosion . . .

The Turning Point...

AT EIGHT MINUTES after three one July night in 1916 two trainloads of assorted explosives in Jersey City, N. J., went up in a roar that cost two people their lives and the U. S. its next-to-last shred of confidence in the German Kaiser's government.

This was the famous Black Tom explosion, widely blamed (but without real proof) on German saboteurs. It was a turning point in our foreign relations, and, although he didn't know it at the time, it was THE turning point for a young Philadelphia-born lawyer named John J. McCloy.

Unaware that the Black Tom blast was meant for him personally, McCloy went off to war a year later.

Then just 20 years ago, long after the dust had settled around Jersey City, a New York law firm started looking for a sharp-eyed fellow who could handle a top-bracket lawsuit before the International Court in The Hague.

Black Tom Bobs Up Again

They chose John McCloy, one of their toughest minded legal eagles. McCloy went abroad—and found himself smack up against Black Tom.

On behalf of British and French owners of the munitions, he dug out new evidence which definitely pinned the explosion on the Kaiser's agents. The result: he won $20,000,000 for his clients, and a first-rate understanding of the German character for himself.

Years later, in 1941, U. S. Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson, aware of his work on the Black Tom case, drafted McCloy to set up an internal security system. After Pearl Harbor, he was named Assistant Secretary of War. Then early this year he was chosen the American Occupation chief in Germany. Black Tom had started him on his way there!

Here's the New MIRACLE DRUG for COLDS described in READER'S DIGEST

DECEMBER 1949

ANAHIST TRADE MARK is the only drug proved CLINICALLY EFFECTIVE for Colds in the rigidly controlled test described in the Reader's Digest article.

CAN STOP COLD SYMPTOMS IN A SINGLE DAY!

ANSWERS to QUESTIONS ABOUT THE NEW MIRACLE DRUG

ANAHIST TRADE MARK

Q. Should ANAHIST be given to children?

A. Yes. Simply follow directions in package. ANAHIST also helps prevent passing your colds on to children.

Q. Are all antihistamines equally effective?

A. No. Because they differ as chemical compounds, they vary greatly in performance and effectiveness. ANAHIST is the CLINICALLY PROVED EFFECTIVE antihistamine which you can buy with confidence for family use.

Q. If a cold has already run 3 or 4 days, will ANAHIST furnish relief?

A. In your own interest, we emphasize that ANAHIST loses its full effectiveness unless taken early. If symptoms persist, see your doctor.

Facts about Antihistamines

All antihistamines are not alike. They vary greatly in performance and effectiveness. ANAHIST is a distinctive antihistamine which you can buy with confidence for family use to combat colds.

As the Reader's Digest article reports, this new miracle drug is based upon revolutionary clinical findings: The common cold usually begins as an allergic response which causes an outpouring of histamine.

But ANAHIST successfully combats the destructive histamine! With ANAHIST, the great majority of people can now avoid bad colds all year 'round... and avoid passing them on to others!

REMEMBER: ANAHIST'S 25 mg. antihistamine tablets provide the CLINICALLY-PROVED EFFECTIVE dosage for colds, now available without a prescription.

Prompt relief for hay fever, too. You can buy ANAHIST at your drugstore in the large family-size bottle of 40 tablets... also 15 tablets... ANAHIST is the exclusive property of ANAHIST CO., INC., Yonkers 2, New York.

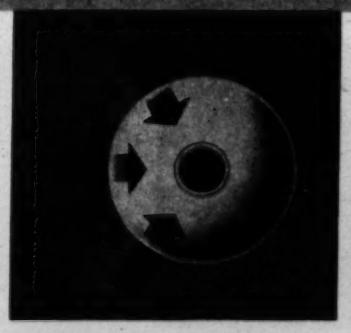
1. To say Goodbye to the Common Cold—buy ANAHIST now! Upon exposure to colds or in the first 24 hours of a cold, in either adult or child...

2.... give ANAHIST instantly! Continue the ANAHIST treatment, one tablet after each meal and at bedtime—72 hours for maximum effectiveness...



3.... Diagram shows how histamine attacks the cells in nose and throat, producing cold symptoms. But, when ANAHIST is taken promptly...

4.... it seems to act like a protective wall, blocking the destructive histamine. Thus, ANAHIST can stop cold symptoms in a single day...

5....ANAHIST's cold-control also helps prevent secondary complications: coughing, fever, aches, pains or serious ills resulting from colds.

1,000 Years of Marriage!

MARRIAGES THAT LASTED: Twenty couples from Las Vegas, Nev., and vicinity who participated in Golden Wedding Sweepstakes. Between them, they represent more than 1,000 years—a millennium—of married life. Oldest couple: the Albert Frehners, second couple from left, front row. Hosts Mr. and Mrs. Gabby Hayes are at right, rear.

Here's how they looked as bride and groom—and now:

THEN AND NOW: Picture at left shows Mr. and Mrs. William Gore, another happily married Las Vegas couple, in '98 and (right) today.

TOP HAT crowned head of Francisco Rozzini on wedding day in Brooklyn. In 50 years since, he has lost moustache, has taken to sport shirts.

HERE'S REAL PROOF THAT HOME LIFE IS HERE TO STAY

To viewers-with-alarm who see the American family stumbling to its doom through a thicket of divorce statistics, it can serve as tonic.

Here's why: the 20 elderly couples posing here represent over 1,000 years of married life! What's more, they hail from the No. 2 capital of divorce in America: Las Vegas, Nevada.

Their picture was taken when a Las Vegas hotel and a Las Vegas newspaper, concerned at the somewhat gamey reputation of their city, jointly staged a party for local married couples who had celebrated their golden anniversaries. What did these veterans think of marriage? Is it here to stay? The replies came right back. "We think marriage is fine after 51 years of it," said one great-grandsire. "And we'll help show 'em Las Vegas is as good for marriage as it is for divorce!"

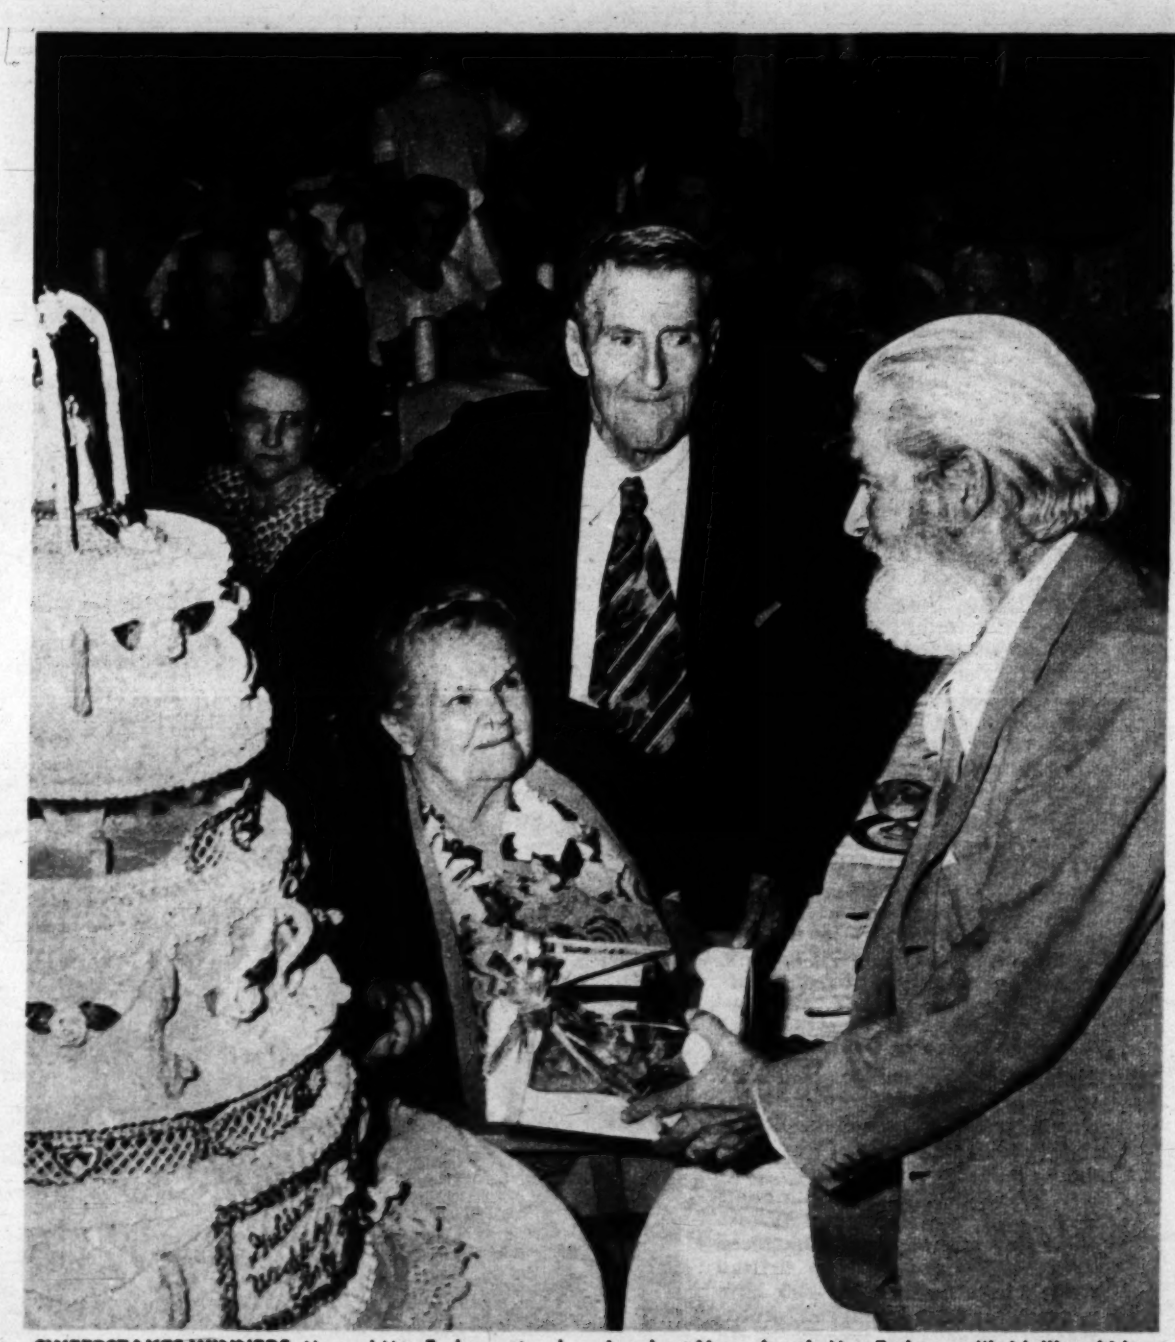
Marrying Parsons Are Busy, Too

He could, too, for statistics show that ministers and justices of the peace in towns like Las Vegas and Reno work just as hard—or harder—marrying couples as do local circuit court judges in unmarrying them.

How to make marriage work? "You've got to give up the idea that everything should be fun and easy," declared Mrs. Albert Frehner, married 61 years. "You've got to work to stay married!"

But is divorce (there were 405,000 last year!) ever really necessary? "Some folks just can't seem to get along, ever," agreed one couple. "They've just got to do something. But too many young people think they can't make it work before they've given their marriage a chance to grow some roots. They forget that love – and mutual respect—increase as they weather troubles together."

Las Vegas' oldest-married couple, the Frehners, were winners of a Golden Wedding Sweepstakes. Their prize was a three-day "honeymoon" at a Las Vegas hotel, with film actor Gabby Hayes and wife, married 40 years, as hosts. "Marriage," remarked Frehner, "sure is wonderful!"



SWEEPSTAKES WINNERS, Mr. and Mrs. Frehner, stand by to cut "wedding cake." Before knife pierces frosting, host Hayes hands Mrs. Frehner a "bridal" orchid. Elderly couples attended banquet at Flamingo Hotel.

55 YEARS have passed since Mr. and Mrs. John J. Winter were married in San Francisco. Most Golden Wedding couples were great grandparents.

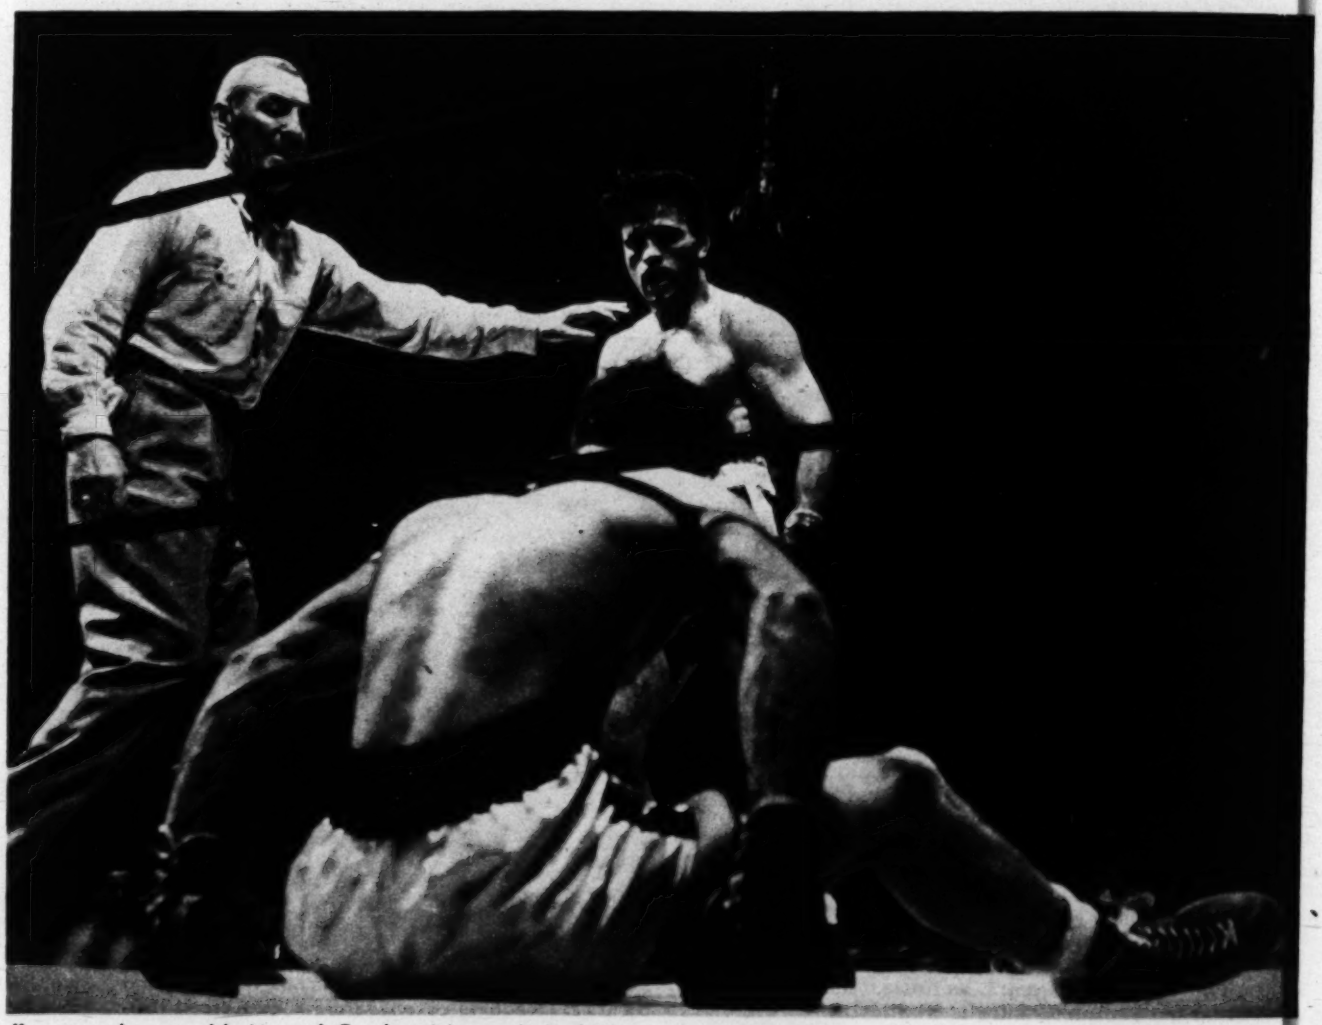
WEDDING portrait of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Walker was taken by "Art Bazar" in Salt Lake City in '95. At Sweepstakes dinner, they held hands.

Jinx on Middleweights?

CHAMPS' BELT

For 50 years the 160-pounders have been plagued by misery, want—and sudden death

By FRANK De BLOIS



Jinx caught up with Marcel Cerdan (shown here beating Lavern Roach) on a mountain top in the Azores.

FIGHT FANS will tell you that Marcel Cerdan, France's greatest fighting man, is up there with the angels now—in a resin-covered heaven where no one ever counts you out for good.

He's there, the more superstitious of his followers believe, because of the existence of a mysterious jinx on middleweight fighters which led him to an early and violent end. He was killed, as you know, when a plane on which he was a passenger crashed in flames against an Azores mountain peak October 28.

The jinx, these sources insist, has haunted middleweights (160-pound boxers) for more than 50 years. In some cases, as in Cerdan's, it has struck in the form of sudden death. In others, it has left its champions the victims of blindness, want and obscurity.

A Lonely Grave in Oregon

First to fall was the original Jack Dempsey, known as "the Nonpareil," middleweight champion of the world and the idol of New York fight circles in the 1880s. Dempsey lost his title to Bob Fitzsimmons in 1891 and was immediately forgotten by his followers. Shattered in health and spirit, he drifted west, where he died in 1895. Five years later his unmarked, weed-strewn grave was discovered in Portland, Ore.

His successor was one of the titans of the ring, yet Bob Fitzsimmons' end was almost as dismal as Dempsey's. In 1897, weighing only 163 pounds, "Ruby Robert" knocked out James J. Corbett to win the world's heavyweight championship. Twelve years later, battered and broke, he returned to his native Australia and at the age of 47 was matched with a youthful local fighter. It took the latter twelve rounds to chop Fitzsimmons to the ground but when the gallant old champion staggered out of the ring, it was to the accompaniment of catcalls and jeers.

He was already forgotten.

For years the middleweight jinx lay as silent as a sleeping asp, but when it struck again it stung the greatest champion the class had ever known, Stanley Ketchel, "the Michigan assassin." Like Fitzsimmons, Ketchel was too good for men of his size. Weighing 155 pounds, he once floored Jack Johnson, the heavyweight champ, and for years he ruled the middleweights.

In 1911, at the height of his fame, Ketchel went west on a vacation. There he was shot and killed by a farm hand in a dispute over the affections of a waitress.

A violent end came also to Battling Siki, a stout-hearted Senegalese who fought not only the best middleweights of his time but also won the light-heavyweight championship from Georges Carpentier in Paris. After this fight, Siki somehow lost the magic touch. He dropped his championship, shambled home and was murdered in a street brawl.

A Bedroom in the Twilight

Of equal stature to Ketchel was Sam Langford, a middleweight who whipped more than twenty heavyweights including Johnson who outweighed him by sixty pounds. Today, totally blind, Langford lives in a shabby hall bedroom, alone in the twilight and owning nothing but dreams.

Last of the great middleweights was Harry Greb, whose life came to a grotesque end in 1926 when Greb, with one eye gone and fierce competitive fire burned out of him at last, retired from the ring. Six months later he bled to death in an Atlantic City hospital following an operation on a troublesome nose misshapen by a thousand punches.

On occasion, even, the middleweight jinx seems to have affected welterweights with middleweight ambitions.

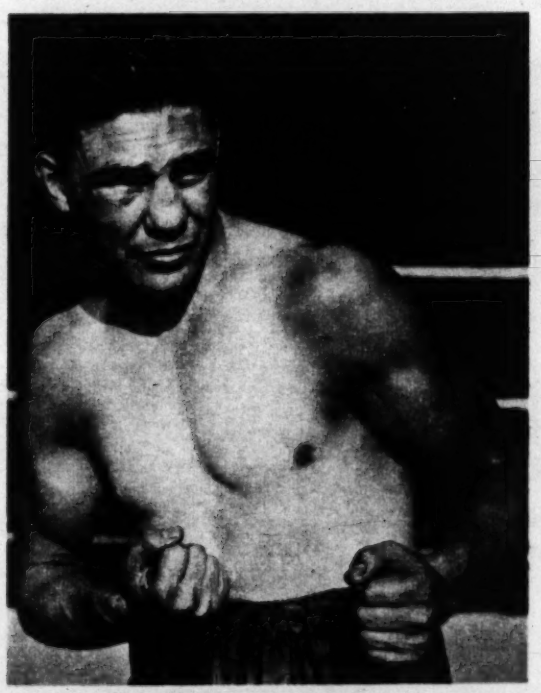
Vince Foster, a welterweight whose punching power almost led him to the jinx-ridden middleweight crown, was a throwback to Greb. Foster's career was larded with violence. It began with vicious back-alley brawls, led him through the smoke-clogged small clubs to Madison Square Garden and ended when his short and brutal life was snuffed out last summer by an automobile careening through the night.

A Date with the Angels

Middleweight laurels also beckoned to Kid McCoy, whose misadventures later led him to the penitentiary, and to Lew Jenkins, a lightweight with a middleweight's punch, whose climb toward the top was stalled by injuries he received in a motorcycle crash.

And now Marcel Cerdan has joined Ketchel and Greb and the other great middleweights who have been paid off in death by the jinx. Where will it strike again?

"NONPAREIL" Jack Dempsey (no relation to ex-heavyweight champion), famed middleweight hero in '80s, died forgotten by fans who once idolized him.



HARRY GREB, "the Pittsburgh Windmill," was hard-fighting, high-living middleweight king in 1920s. Hemorrhages brought a sudden end to Greb's career.

STANLEY KETCHELL, shown here flooring great Jack Johnson, was greatest of all middleweights. At height of his career he was murdered by a rival in love.

Say, Isn't She a Peach?

Your baby is a peach, too, we bet! And we're experts at picking 'em—in the bassinet or orchard. For babies (and what they eat) are our only business.

Speaking of orchards, each season Gerber's specialists okay only the fruits best suited to your baby. The same is true of vegetables and grains. Then, these are cooked by Gerber's Double-Protection Method. 1. It protects the naturally good flavor babies like. 2. It maintains a high degree of the vitamins and minerals your baby needs.

Your Peach needs meats, too, for important body-building proteins. So, among our Baby Specialties are the tastiest, most appetizing beef, veal and liver ever. Prepared from Armour quality cuts. Ready to serve. And about 50% cheaper than meats you'd spend hours scraping.

Who knows best what's best for your Peach? Wouldn't you say your doctor first? And then the people who spend all their time studying baby foods. From Starting Cereals through Junior Meats, Gerber's please more babies. And doctors approve them too!

BY BETH MERRIMAN
PARADE'S FOOD EDITOR

CHRISTMAS DINNER is one you don't have to plan — tradition does it for you! To go with the traditional bird, we've made some suggestions here to add a welcome touch of variety: cranberry jelly, rutabaga fluff, and flavorsome celery sauce.

RUTABAGA FLUFF: Cook equal quantities of yellow turnips and white potatoes together until tender. Mash until free from lumps. Add hot milk, butter, salt, pepper. Whip until light, fluffy.

CELERY SAUCE: Heat one can of condensed cream of celery soup with ¼ cup cream. Add 6-oz. can broiled mushrooms. Add 3 cups of cooked Brussels sprouts. Heat over hot water.

CHILL 2 cans strained cranberry sauce. Remove both ends of cans so jelly will slide out easily. Cut in crosswise and lengthwise slices. Cut out trees and stars. Whip scraps; serve another time.

THE ICY ROAD to success: executive-to-be Harrison Cass steps out of ice-sheathed car he tested in 20-below-zero "cold room." Future Ford executives must know how all departments work.

EVEN ASSEMBLY LINE work was prescribed for Cass (right). He spent 7 weeks assembling Fords.

Ford Trains Harrison Cass

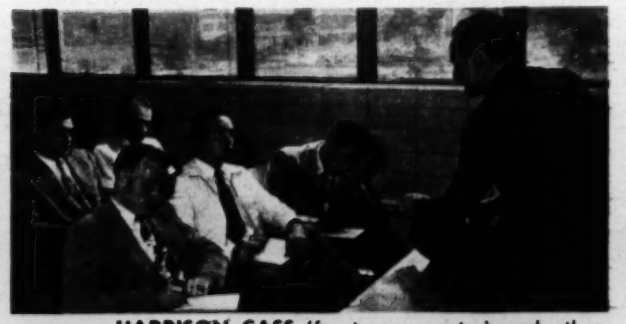
He samples hundreds of jobs before he's picked to start in one

By BOB GOLDMAN and SAM PETOK

THE HARD-WORKING young researcher with the ice-coated automobile (above) may be a big shot in the years ahead.

He is Harrison E. Cass, 27, of Des Moines, Iowa, one of 100 men being trained by Henry Ford II to help him run his great industrial machine.

It's a new idea: at least the way Ford does it. Ford worked it out two years ago.



HARRISON CASS (front row, center) and other Ford executive trainees take down notes in class.

At that time Cass was a senior law student at the University of Iowa. One day a Ford talent scout came to the campus, and because the Dean knew Cass had been considering what he was going to do, he sent Cass to talk to the Ford man.

Cass knew right away he was being "cased." The Ford man, a pleasant individual with a reassuring manner and a sharp eye, was in no hurry. For two hours he talked with Cass, wanting to know about his plans and hopes, his recent marriage, his manner of thinking, his health. He asked Cass what jobs he had held. Cass told him he had been a waiter, a construction worker and a bank clerk assigned to collect on bad checks. As a soldier he drove a tank and did personnel work at Fort Knox.

The Ford man studied Cass' face carefully as he talked. At the end of the talk Cass had made a good impression. He was asked later to come to River Rouge as one of the first 22 men selected for the Ford experiment: a special training course to steer men toward management. Other industries develop talent in similar ways but few, if any, to such an extent as Ford.

Cass was so excited over the whole idea—and so determined to qualify—that he read Ford's booklet about it ten times, finally even memorized it.

Then, before he took his physical exam he ran four miles a day for three weeks—just to be sure he was in shape.

WHEN HARRISON CASS went to work at Ford he gained experience fast.

He reported for work in the tool and die shop, where a gray-haired foreman with an Irish name looked at him with an appraising eye. "So you're what they call a 'trainee,'" he said. "Well, we'll start you out right where all the new boys start—sweeping out. After that, we'll show you how we make dies."

Cass, who is husky and knows how to get along, faithfully pushed a broom for a couple of days, then went progressively from bench to machine to mock-up. He learned swiftly, working in turn with lathes, shapers, grinders. He got to know new jobs, and he got to know—and like—other workers.

Cass is now on the home stretch in Ford's two-year training course. He has sweated in the foundry, tested cars at 20-below-zero, scrambled "down the line" fitting parts.

Next month he'll take his first real step forward. He'll be spotted in a job for which he's shown aptitude during the training period. He doesn't know which one it will be, although by that time he'll have worked in 300 different spots. In off hours he has argued trade unionism and politics. Veterans have wised him up on how to get along. They've shown him how to run a machine without getting his fingers pinched.

Cass has also seen his first industrial accident. He saw a fellow-worker in the pattern shop pour his own shoe full of molten metal. Other workers somehow tore off the shoe and saved the man's foot.

He has also discovered how production bottlenecks form. Other workers helped him keep up when he fell behind in the assembly line one day while installing brake fluid.

In seven weeks on assembly, he learned a "healthy respect for the men on the line."

But in a 16,000-word report, Cass frankly criticized red-tape.

SOFT-SPOKEN, deliberate, serious-minded, he is the kind of a man Henry Ford II wants for the kind of job Ford has to do. Sometimes Cass' friends may think in his young enthusiasm he is a little too serious. He likes to tell a story about three workmen who were asked what they were doing. One said he was mixing mortar; the second said he was laying bricks, but the third replied: "I'm building a temple."

FAMILY MAN CASS feeds Junior (aged one). Milk bill for two children (23 qts. a week) is big item.

Cass says that "at Ford, that's what I'm doing—building a temple."

Serious or not, Cass is popular with his friends, who sometimes see lights on in the Cass house at 2 a.m.

They know that Harrison E. Cass, future Ford executive, is hard at work—typing reports.

What they don't know is that in Ford's file is a memo which says: Harrison E. Cass—maintains high level of interest—thorough in his analyses—conscientious in his application—particularly able in careful research.

Things look promising for Ford's H. E. Cass.

AT HOME in $10,000 house, Casses (center) play bridge with friends. Cass, who now makes $3,660 a year, spends many evenings working at home. He has written 15 reports in two years, including two nearly as long as a novel.

BIG CITIES—from Paris and London to New York and San Francisco—have two personalities they show to all the world: the behemoth of business by day, the glittering showcase of entertainment by night. All have a third personality seldom seen by outsiders, the City at dawn, after the entertainment has ended and before business has rumbled into high gear.

French-born photographer Roger Coster, who has taken many a picture of Paris at dawn, caught some of his most sensitive pictures this side of the Atlantic in Chicago, as the gargantua of the mid-west rubbed open its eyes.

More akin in mood to Paris or London at dawn than to itself later in the day, it is the Chicago of pale sunlight slanting over the silent cobblestones under the Wells Street "L" (above), the milkman clinking his bottles along Michigan Avenue, tired showgirls waiting for coffee to give them strength to go home, produce workers dunking doughnuts in the open-all-night eateries near the Fulton Street Market.

The noises of the day, lulled to hollow echoes as half empty trains round the Loop, at midnight, shrink to more personal dimensions. In the nursery of Cook County Hospital, a thin cry brings a nurse hurrying past windows greying with light. Northward, in the suburbs toward Evanston, a cat meaows under a sleeping commuter's window.

Chicago, second largest city in America and restlessly shouldering its way upward, is proud of its light and noise. Coster in three mornings of shutter-snapping, has found its third personality. Even Parisians would feel at home in its dawn.

TREASURY REPORT: Fred Allen's favorite comedian, Doc Rockwell, was invited to entertain at the annual Radio Correspondents' Association Dinner for the President and was told to submit his expense account afterward. A few days later the swindle sheet arrived and floored the committee. Here's the way it read:

"Transportation, own car: gas and oil: $7.35 . . . Tip to 3 boys* for cleaning windshield: 40¢ (*one of the boys was a man and got 20¢).

Depreciation: $6 . . . Four Meals: $9.50 . . . Tip to ugly waitress: 25¢. Tip to waitress with pretty smile: $1 . . . (a useless investment; she was wed to the bus boy).

Hotel Room: $4.50 . . . Newspapers: 12¢ . . . Cigars (personal): $9.50 . . . Cigar for Master of Ceremonies: 6¢ . . . Porter in men's room: 25¢ . . . Stamps: 16¢. Shoe shine 10¢ plus tip, 5¢. Incidental expenses: $500 . . .

TIME TO RETIRE: "One of the television networks changes Vice-Presidents so frequently, a little desk card appeared briefly on the desk of a certain executive the other day: "This Week's Guest Vice-President."

OLIVE BRANCH: In Los Angeles, a taxi phone box has a bulletin reading: "Please, taxi drivers, we don't like to give tickets any more than you like to get them. Don't park in red zones. Thank you, signed, Radio Officers."

FRANK AND HONEST: A classified ad in a suburban Chicago weekly read: "Wanted: 5 room apt.; 2 baths; enclosed shower; terrace and fireplace. Money no object. I haven't got any." . . .

LEAVE IT TO THE GIRLS: Comedian Joey Adams, whose new book, "The Curtain Never Falls," is another "What Makes Sammy Run," claims he overheard this conversation between two gushing girls. "Did I tell you about Mildred, Myrtle?" "No, what happened to Mildred?" "Shhh, come closer and I'll tell you. Mildred got mixed up with You-Know-Who and they went to What's-His-Name's house with What-Do-You-Call-Them and you should see what happened to You-Know-Who on account of you know why. Gosh, Myrtle, I'm sure I told you this story before!" "You did, you did, but, dearie, THIS is the first time I heard all the details!" . . .

COOPERATION: New York City has been worrying about a water shortage. The official plea to the public to conserve water met with instantaneous response from members of the cafe society set. A group of playboys frequenting the Stork, El Morocco, the Colony and 21 announced they were giving up chasers immediately . . .

Joey Adams

OCCUPATIONAL HAZARD: A New York peddler startled Federal Judge Porterie when he asked the jurist to sentence him to six, instead of four months, for wearing a Navy uniform without being in the Navy. "You see, your honor," he explained, "I need a new suit—and they don't hand them out to discharged prisoners unless they've served at least six months." . . .

MOVIE DEPT.: M-G-M now adds a credit line at the conclusion of some of its films reading: "Produced in Hollywood, U.S.A." It's nice to know that Hollywood finally joined the Union . . .

How Good Are Your Manners?

SCHOOLING in manners: Boy seats girl at Madison School, Phoenix, Ariz.

GOOD MANNERS are demonstrated by 8th graders for younger pupils.

HOW TO HOLD fork properly is shown by the 8th grade couple in dining hall.

PLEASANT CONVERSATION is one rule of good manners at dinner table.

THAT'S A QUESTION THESE SCHOOLKIDS NOW ASK EACH OTHER

THERE ARE DOLLARS and cents (and happiness) in good manners—a fact overlooked in many homes and in schools that purport to be training children to "get along." For a well-mannered child, like a well-mannered adult, has a practical advantage that pays off in making a living.

In Phoenix, Ariz., as in almost all other cities, manners had always been left to parents (not always with favorable results!). But this winter in Phoenix, manners have come into their own. An alert Phoenix grammar school at last has put manners training on a formal basis; now good manners are being taught along with the 3Rs.

The emphasis is on table manners, and each day at lunch, the boys politely help the girls to their seats. Then they engage in quiet conversation – with elbows off the table!

Back of this somewhat miraculous behavior is a serious program that began experimentally in October, 1948, and now is in its first year of full-time operation. It was born in the mind of an observant cafeteria supervisor at

SPICY MINCE-APPLE PIE MADE WITH CRUSTQUICK

by

Betty Crocker

Mince pie, especially, needs pastry that's crisp and flaky. Just the kind you can get with our pie crust mix, Crustquick, even if you're new to pie making. Crustquick is based on the pastry method we've spent years in perfecting.

In Crustquick we blend Gold Medal Enriched Flour, salt and high-grade shortening . . . more skillfully than would be possible by hand. You simply add water. My General Mills staff tests Crustquick regularly. Try Crustquick. It's very easy to roll and handle. And you can be sure of crisp, flaky pastry for all your pies.

Plenty in each package for a 9-inch double crust pie—as you'll see when you make this Crustquick Mince-Apple Pie. Filling is luscious but not too rich. Thrifty, too.

Make. . Crustquick Pastry for 8 or 9-inch Two Crust Pie

Break into pieces 9-oz. pkg. mincemeat

Add. . . 1⅓ cups cold water
⅓ cup sugar

Place over heat and stir until all lumps are thoroughly broken up. Bring to a brisk boil. Continue boiling for 1 minute. Allow to cool.

Fill pastry-lined pan with. . the cooled mincemeat
1 to 1½ cups chopped apples

Place twisted strips of pastry over filling. Seal and flute (see pkg.). Bake 45 to 50 minutes in hot oven (425°).

General Mills

Madison grammar school, Mrs. Nina Willson. Day after day, she watched youngsters bolt food with abandon. She decided that for their own sakes something should be done about it.

School authorities were quick to take up the idea. Parents were polled, and, while skeptical, they proved enthusiastic. Then the idea was put up to the pupils. Manners training was to be voluntary. Curiously enough, boys were as interested in improving their manners as were the girls.

To the art class was assigned a job: making posters dramatizing the most common dining-room faults: (1) eating too fast, (2) mouth cramming, (3) spoon licking, (4) table-lolling, (5) loud talking, (6) unpleasant topics of conversation, and (7) dirty hands.

Movies and textbooks helped round out the program.

Pupils Test Each Other

Today, Phoenix pupils put their names in a glass jar each morning. From these, eight names are drawn: these are the pupils to be "tested" (by other pupils) at lunch that day. Prize for good manners: ice cream.

The manners supervisors have made some interesting discoveries. One is this:

It is often hard to distinguish, at lunch, between youngsters from homes where manners are carefully taught and homes where manner-training is ostensibly ignored!

At first it was feared that self-consciousness and friction might arise. The fears proved groundless. In the whole school, only two pupils, both boys, have declined to participate in the program.

On the other hand, pupil-judges have been known to coach one of the daily "candidates" to help him win ice cream. And parents report children are going home to teach manners to younger brothers and sisters!

Ice cream is reward for serious study by small-fry of rules of proper behavior. Art department made posters.

HOW TO MAKE AN INTRODUCTION is taught youngster by Mrs. Willson, originator of course.

KEEPING ELBOWS CLOSE TO BODY while using knife and fork is rule heavily stressed by teachers.

HOW TO HELP A LADY on a bus is taught 8th graders who practice with bus parked near school. Manners in many situations are taught.

THESE MEN CAN'T LAST MUCH LONGER, D. L.

THE DRAGON LADY FINDS BITTER AMUSEMENT IN THE FATE THAT ENDS HER CAREER, HERE ON A PILE OF RUBBLE, UPON A ROCK, IN A FORSAKEN CORNER OF THE WORLD.

THOSE BANDITS, OUTSIDE, HAVE TOO MANY MODERN IMPROVEMENTS. THIS ROOKERY WAS NEVER INTENDED TO WITHSTAND MORTAR FIRE. WALLS KNOCKED DOWN, FOOD SUPPLIES UP IN SMOKE, WELL CAVED IN BY A DIRECT HIT... THE SCORE SAYS WE TAKE THE SHORT END OF THE PURSE.

THEIR LEADER AMUSES HIMSELF BY DRIVING HERDS OF WILD HORSES THIS WAY TO FEIGN ATTACK. SOONER OR LATER COMES THE REAL ASSAULT— THEN, POUF! WE ARE DONE!

YEAH, I... HEY! WHAT'S GIG DOING OUT THERE IN THE OPEN?

GIG! YOU LITTLE FOOL! DOWN! DO YOU WANT A SNIPER TO PICK YOU OFF? OH, TERRY! HADN'T NOTICED WHERE I WAS HEADING...NOT THAT IT MATTERS ANY MORE.

LOOK, BABY! NOBODY'S BLOWN THE WHISTLE YET. SOME SORT OF BREAK'S LIABLE TO POP UP. IT HAS. WE'LL ALL DIE OF OLD AGE ...EXCEPT GARY!

GARY! YOUR HUSBAND! WHAT...? THE BANDITS WANT HIM FOR THE PRICE ON HIS HEAD. ONCE THEY HAVE HIM THEY LOSE INTEREST IN US — SO HE'S GONE TO THEM!

HO! THIS IS A STRANGE THING! THE ENEMY NO LONGER RETURNS OUR FIRE.

NOW! PROOF that brushing teeth right after eating with

COLGATE DENTAL CREAM HELPS STOP TOOTH DECAY!

Exhaustive Research by Eminent Dental Authorities Proves How Using Colgate Dental Cream Helps Stop Tooth Decay Before It Starts!

NOW! Dental science offers proof that brushing teeth with Colgate Dental Cream right after eating is an effective, safe way to help prevent new cavities, greatly reduce tooth decay!

More than 2 years' continuous research at leading universities—hundreds of case histories—makes this the most conclusive proof in all dentifrice research on tooth decay!

For now—the same toothpaste you use to clean your breath while you clean your teeth—brings you a proved way to reduce tooth decay!

Colgate Dental Cream has been proved to contain all the necessary ingredients—including an exclusive patented ingredient—for effective daily dental care. No risk of irritation to tissues and gums! And no change in Colgate's famous flavor, foam, or cleansing action! The Colgate Dental Cream now at your dealer's is the same formula used in these exhaustive tests.

Regular visits to your dentist are necessary for complete dental care. No home method can help everyone; nor can it stop all tooth decay or help cavities already started.

Mothers! Children Love Colgate's Flavor! It's Easy To Start Them On The Colgate Way To Reduce Tooth Decay!

Don't wait another day to start your children on Colgate Dental Cream. Teach them the importance of always brushing their teeth right after every meal. They'll love Colgate's flavor, so it's easy to get them to use Colgate's correctly, give them all the benefits of this safe, proved way to reduce tooth decay!

X-Rays Show How Proper Use of Colgate's Helps Stop Tooth Decay!

Under the direction of eminent dental authorities, one group of college men and women always brushed their teeth with Colgate Dental Cream right after eating—while another group followed their usual dental care. The average of the group using Colgate's as directed, and using Colgate's exclusively, was a startling reduction in number of cavities—far less tooth decay! The other group developed new cavities at a much higher rate.

Modern research shows that tooth decay is caused by mouth acids which are at their worst right after eating. When you brush your teeth with Colgate's as directed, you help remove mouth acids before they can harm enamel. And Colgate's penetrating foam reaches crevices in teeth where food particles often lodge.

Always Use Colgate's To Clean Your Breath While You Clean Your Teeth—And Help Stop Tooth Decay!

NO OTHER DENTIFRICE OFFERS PROOF OF THESE RESULTS
